The lawer thumped again on the wall without any real object except to gain time for thinking what to do next. He raised his left hand to a level with his head, and placed it against the wall, at the same time putting his foot upon a wall protector that projected from the mopboard. Before he had time to realize what he had done, he felt the partition give under the pressure of his hand, and the wall protector sink under his foot, and simultaneously a part of the wall swung open in front of him, disclosing an upright, ghastly, emaciated form. In the infinitesimal fraction of a second that it maintained its upright attitude he recognized the distorted features of the missing Harding, and heard Taggart gasp, "The third time!" and before he could move his hands the figure fell face down to the floor. He turned to see Taggart reel and sink lifeless under the window. So great was his astonishment and horror that he stood for an instant staring blankly from one prostrate figure to the other. Then he turned to the opening in the wall. He saw a closet too narrow to permit of a man lying down in it. It was completely closed on all sides, except the one opened by the door, whose combination lock he had accidentally worked. On the floor were packages of paper and parcels that he at once judged to be the $50,000 abstracted from the safe. He rushed to Taggart, in whom he sought to discover signs of life. He raised his head and chafed his hands anxiously.

"I say, Drake, you owe me a dollar and fifteen cents," said a voice at the office door. "You forgot to pay your bill and I got tired of waiting—why, what's the matter?"

It was the brother lawyer.

"Run for a pitcher of water and get a doctor if you can," was Mr. Drake's answer.

When the lawyer returned with water Taggart had recovered consciousness and was sitting up on the floor, and Mr. Drake was saying:

"It's all right, Taggart, old man; it's all clear now. Your money and securities are all in the secret closet that Harding had made to hide them in. He must have been at the job when you came, and, having no time to complete it, shut himself in there without realizing that the door could be opened only from this side. The miserable fellow undoubtedly suffocated and starved to death."

"I told you I saw him," responded Taggart faintly.—F. R. Burton in The Bulletin.

The Most Popular Poem.

The Cincinnati Enquirer answers a correspondent by saying that the most popular poem in the English language is Clement C. Moore's "Night Before Christmas." We do not know that we concur in this opinion. Is Moore's poem more popular than "Mary Had a Little Lamb?" By "most popular," we take it, The Enquirer means the most widely known and the most frequently repeated. The Moore poem is popular only at a certain short season of the year; there are other simpler lyrics that are taught to children every day of the year. The poem about Mary's lamb has been parodied oftener, perhaps, than any other English poem; it has come to be a necessary part of one's education. Another universal poem is Watts' "Let Dogs Delight," etc., and another, "Little Drops of Water," etc., and a third, "Twinkle, Twinkle, Little Star." These verses are known wherever the English language is spoken.—Chicago News.

A correspondent of The Evening Post writes: "I took a little friend of mine—aged 4 years—to the Paulist church, corner of Fifty-ninth street and Ninth avenue, on Sunday, and he was so delighted with the procession—a usual feature of the church—that he exclaimed on seeing it: 'I know what that's for; it's a parade, and God is elected.'"

THE SUN FOR 1889.
And for the Democracy.

THE SUN believes that the campaign for the election of a Democratic Congress in 1890 and a Democratic President in 1892 should begin on or about the fourth of next March. THE SUN will be on hand at the beginning and until the end of the most interesting and important political conflict since the war, doing its honest utmost, as ever, to secure the triumph of the Democratic party and the permanent supremacy of the principles laid down by Jefferson, Jackson and Tilden.

The great fact of the year is the return to absolute power of the party most enemy of all good Democrats, the political organization against whose overthrow THE SUN fought in the front for fifteen years, the memorable years of Grant and the Fraud Hayes, and Garfield and Arthur.

It is the same old enemy that Democrats now confront, and he will be intrenched in the same strong position. It has been carried once by brave and hopeful fighting. Do you not believe with THE SUN that the thing can be done again? Wait and see!

The hope of the Democracy is in the loyal efforts of a united press, cherishing no memories of past difference in non-essentials, forgetting every thing but the lessons of experience, and that victory is a virtue.

Probably you know THE SUN already as a newspaper that gets all the news and prints it in a comparatively interesting shape; which chronicles facts as they occur and tells the truth about men and events with absolute fearlessness, making the completest and most entertaining journal published anywhere on earth; and which sells its opinions only to its subscribers and purchasers at two cents a copy—on Sundays four cents. If you do not know THE SUN, send for it and learn what a wonderful thing it is to be in the sunshine.

CALIFORNIA LETTER.

EDITOR OF HERALD—National City joins SanDiego on the south and extends south along the bay about three miles, and east from the bay two miles. The land is not as elevated nor as billy and uneven as SanDiego. In the south-east part of the town there are some elvevations fr m which fine views can be had of the bay, ocean and surrounding country, and here are being erected some of the finest residences.

This is a better location for a fine town than SanDiego, being more level and not requiring near as much grading to make fine streets. It is better situated for manufactories, giving better sites for buildings, railroads and water facilities for shipping, etc., and efforts are being made to get manufacturers to locate here. There is quite an extensive carriage factory, and reduction works have just started, which promise to be of great benefit to the place; this is the only one in this part of the State, and as there are rich mines of both gold and silver in the county and in Mexico, that will be brought here, and now there are facilities for reduction the mines are being developed. This is the terminus of the Santa Fee R. R. and part of their shops are here. Also, it is the headquarters of the National City and Otay Moter R. R, which has 60 miles of road with branches running in several directions. This company has done a good deal to open up the back country.

This place has been built up mostly within the past two years. SanDiego being started first, and getting the most capital, has grown the fastest, but National has some advantages which will make it a strong rival to SanDiego. We have a fine wharf but business has increased so as to require more wharf facilities, which will be built the com,ng season.

The city has been incorporated less then two years. The boom was in SanDiego and this place was in a measure overlooked and it has suffered from the effects of the boom, but it is now attracting the attention of investors. We have several fine business houses and many fine dwellings, several good churches and two fine school houses.

The land and town company own about 20,000 acres of land in and around the city. They went up the Sweet Water Valley about six miles, to a narrow gorge in the mountains, where they built a dam to form a reservoir to hold the water for supplying the city and surrounding country; the water is conducted through pipes to all parts of the city, but a more detailed account of our water supply will be given in another letter.

Chula Vista joins National on the south. Here the Land and Town Co have laid out several thousand acres into five acre lots for surburban residences and require all purchasers to build within six months a house to cost not less than $2,000. They have sold a good many lots and many fine residences have been built. The location is the finest in this section, the whole tract being an almost level plain of high Mesa or table land baveing a fine view of the ocean, bay and mountain, and well suppled with water pipes from the reservoir, and is connected with National City and SanDiego by the Moter road.

South east of Chula Vista is the town, which is growing in importance, is located on the Otay Valley and Mesa a very fine section of land, which is being fast taken up and improved. West of Chula Vista, at the head of bay, south of SanDiego, is laid out and intended as a suburb of SanDiego; it is finely located on level Mesa land, but is not being improved very fast. Joining South SanDiego on the south is Oneanta by the Sea, and near the Mexican line. Some improvements are being made. This is a fine level section of Mesa land, and is principally laid out in acre tracts for gardening and orchards. On the west side of the bay and on the Peninsula separating the ocean and bay is Coronado Heights, laid out and put upon the market about a year ago, and as to location for beautiful scenery there is none finer on the bay, but it has not been improved much yet. All these places I have described are almost one continuous town plot surrounding the bay, and are all connected by a belt moter read running around the bay from Coronado Beach thro' National City to SanDiego. It will be a long time before all these places will be built up into cities, yet the locations are such that there will be gradual settlements and improvements.

Last, though not the least, is Coronado Beach, situated on the north end of the narrow peninsula that separates the bay from the ocean and opposite SanDiego, with which it is connected by ferry; the channel is about a mile across.

This peninsula is a low, narrow strip of land which at the north end spreads out to about one and one-half miles long and is more elevated than the coast of the peninsula. Two and one-half years ago there was but one house and now there is a large town. It is beautiful y located, being almost surrounded by water and having a fine view in all directions, the bay on one side and the ocean on the other. It is finely laid out with broad streets and avenues which are planted with various trees, the main avenue is very wide and is set with orange trees on both sides and is named Orange Avenue; the motor road runs on this street. There are several fine parks planted with a profusion of flowers and shrubs, which are beautiful indeed both in summer and in winter. Property is high here; the place was started more for the bon-ton than for common people. At the south end close to the ocean is the largest hotel in the country. It covers seven acres of ground, with an open coast, which is set with the finest flowers and shrubs, and is most beautiful; the building is very unique and varied styles of architecture. It is said to be the finest arranged and finished hotel in the country; it contains over 700 rooms. The hotel is surrounded with extensive paved walks and drives and most beautiful lawns and flowers, and the ocean waves almost wash its foundation on one side. It don't seem as though this would ever become a paying investment, but it may in time. They are receiving a very liberal patronage from tourists and wealthy people who come, spend a season of summer or winter rest and recreation.

I have given but a meager discription of the bay and its surroundings, but enough to give some idea of the country, the boom and the speculation. Nearly all this city plotting has been done within three years. A company with some capital would buy some land where there was a fair place to lay out a town with fine scenery, lay out a city, advertise extensively, set a day for an auction sale and for several days before the sale, parade the streets with a brass band and hacks covered with flaming banners advertising the day of sale, a free lunch on the ground and a free excursion to the place, either by motor road or carriages, they would get a large crowd on the ground, and after lunch commence the sale. There would be great excitement and hundreds who went merely as spectators would catch the infection and buy, paying a small amount down and more on making out the contract. After the excitement had died down, many who had no idea of buying, found that they were badly sold and lost all they had paid. Hundreds who had not the means to carry out the contract, and found that the advance in values predicted by the glib-tongue salesman did not come, and they had to drop their contract. Talk about Yankey ingenuity and tact; the east-earn Yankee can't hold a candle to the California Yankee; they are sure to get left every time.

It will be many long years before all these cities will be built up, but the lands are most valuable for cultivation and will ultimately be occupied with fine homes, orchards and gardens. A. L. S.

HAVE YOU BUILT THAT ICEHOUSE YET?

FOR BUREAU OF INFORMATION, by J. H. Monrad, Winnetka, Ill.

This season looks as if Providence—by giving us a late ice crop—intended to give the laggards a chance yet. Have you built that icehouse yet? If not, why not? You surely can not plead ignorance of the enormous benefit to be derived by having a stock of ice?

In deepsetting your milk you lose three per cent. cream if the water is 40°, and twenty-five per cent. if the water is 50°, as compared with strong chilling with crushed ice, all in ten hours setting. This loss is reduced by thirty-six hours setting to one per cent. respectively, but that is enough to pay for the ice and the extra trouble, and if your water is above 50°, you have no business to set in deep cans at all, unless you wish to donate twenty-five per cent. of your cream to your calves or pigs. If you have a windmill and a well that keeps below 50° in summer, it may be doubtful if if pays to use ice; but even then, I presume, the wind may take a nap just on the very warmest day, and I also presume that it will happen just on the day when it is not possible for you to pump water by hand. Then that little icehouse comes handy.

But supposing you sell your milk to a centrifugal creamery, or to a cheese factory? You will then be apt to think it foolish to spend the labor on harvesting ice and on cooling the milk before it goes to the factory. It is quite natural that you think so, as there is nothing makes us more blind than selfishness. But please look at it from another standpoint. The maker, be it of cheese or butter, has to develop a certain amount of acid in order to get the best result, and if you neglect to cool the milk, it is liable to develop acid too soon, so that the acid becomes master of the maker instead of him being master of the acid, and he can not make the finest product, can not get the highest price. "Well," you say, "that's none of my business." Isn't it? Don't you know that the maker has got to live, and the more he gets the more he can pay you? I can never get tired of preaching this doctrine: "The interest of the factory is your interest, and don't you forget it." So much for the ice in the dairy. But even if you have no dairy, what a blessing ice is to any household. It enables your wife to keep the meat fresh so that you may kill your own or buy in larger quantities, it—well I won't go on enumerating all the benefits, just let your wife have an ice box and a cake of ice every day, during summer, and she will tell you all about it the first day you stop the supply.

THE ICEHOUSE,

I hear you growl: "Yes, it is very easy to sit and preach this and preach that, but how can I afford to indulge in such high toned notions? But this is just where you are wrong. A well built icehouse, with refrigerator and dairy combined, is of course preferable, and if you have $150 to $300 to spare, why, you can not invest them to better advantage, but very little, indeed, is necessary to preserve a heap of ice, just make it a little larger so as to allow more waste. I have preserved ice by digging or cutting into a hill, and building the ice heap there, allowing room for filling in three feet of sawdust all around, and then covering it, roof-shaped, with four or five feet of sawdust, which was handy. But not only had I a heap of ice, but I built a vault of ice in the front part, and improvised double doors to it, with three feet of straw between them, and in this vault my wife kept the meat whenever I killed a sheep, Of course these doors had to be opened only now and then else the vault would soon have been spoiled. The ice blocks for the dairy and ice chest were taken out from the top of the head.

With tarred paper and cheap boarding a house with several air spaces can be built cheaply enough, and is better than having the space in the wall filled with sawdust, etc. The object is to keep the air and rain out, provide drainage, and as much shade as possible. There are hundreds of ways it can be done. If air spaces are too expensive, use three feet sawdust or four or five feet chaff, dry beat leaves, shavings, etc., but the more dry all these materials are kept the better. I have seen one farmer in Pennsylvania, whose icehouse was rather small, put up a heap in a bay of his barn and cover with straw.

In places where ice is difficult to get at, damp snow trampled firmly into the icehouse will be found a very good substitute for cooling the water in deepsetting dairies. In Denmark it is estimated that it takes about one pound ice to every pound of milk handled, and as it is warmer here I should say one and one-quarter pounds to one pound milk. A cubic foot of ice weighs about fifty-six pounds, and the size of ice heap or icehouse can thus be calculated.

OBITUARY.

In Tecumseh, Michigan, Jan. 13, 1889, at the residence of Jerome Cleveland Welcome Sherman suddenly passed away by an attack of neuralgia of the heart. The deceased was born in Burlington, Vt., Jan. 29, 1811. In 1830 he came to Michigan and settled in Tecumseh. In 1840 he was married to Miss Marilla Harris who with two of his own daughters, Mrs. Alva Warling, of Wilburn, Kansas, and Mrs. Chas. Smith, of Grand Rapids, Mich, and two step daughters, Mrs. Richard Ford, of Duluth, Minn. and Mrs. Jerome Cleveland, of Tecumseh, still survive him.

In early life he became a member of the M. E. church in Tecumseh. With his own hands he helped cut and prepare the timber for the first M. E. church built in the place. His own earnestness doubtless was an inspiration to others who helprd in the good work. Through all the years in which the gospel was preached in that house he was a constant hearer of the word and his life was the evidence that he was not a hearer only but a doer of the word. Such was the confidence in him of his bretheren that for many years he held an official relation to the church as class leader, steward or trustee. Not until he was disabled from attending the church by a severe and long continuous attack of rheumatism was he released from the responsibility of office. In all his sufferings he was an example of christian meekness and fortitude. After years of prostration he partially recovered his health and was again found in the house of God. On May 14, 1886, through the earnest persuasion of his friends and in view of making his home with his two daughters, he wene to Kansas. He however, never became reconciled to his new home and longed to return to Tecumseh where through a long life all his interests had centered. Consequently on the 10th of October, 1888, with his aged companion, he started back and reached safely the place above all others where he desired to live and die. But a few weeks longer and he was to take a longer journey and pass to that "bourne from whence no traveler returns." We doubt not that he was ready and to him sudden death was sudden glory. "The memory of the just is blessed."

THE NEW YORK MAIL AND EXPRESS

The Advocate of the Best Interests of the Home—The Enemy of the Saloon. The Friend of American Labor. The Favorite Newspaper of People of Refined Tastes Everywhere.

The New York MAIL AND EXPRESS, the favorite American newspaper of many people of intelligent and cultivated tastes, has recently made some noteworthy improvements, materially increasing its general excellence. It is in the broadest sense

A National Newspaper,

most carefully edited, and adapted to the wants and tastes of intelligent readers throughout the entire country—North, South, East and West. It is a thoroughly clean paper, free from the corrupting, sensational and demoralizing trash, miscalled news, which defiles the pages of too many city papers.

OUR POLITICS.

We believe the Republican party to be the true instrument of the POLITICAL PROGRESS of the American people; and holding that the honest enforcement of its principles is the best guarantee of the national welfare, we shall support them with all our might; but we shall always treat opposing parties with consideration and fair play.

AGAINST THE SALOON.

The MAIL AND EXPRESS is the recognized National organ of the great Anti-Saloon Republican movement. It believes that the liquor traffic as it exists to-day in the United States is the enemy of society, a fruitful source of corruption in politics, the ally of anarchy, a school of crime, and, with its avowed purpose of seeking to corruptly control elections and legislation, is a menace to the public welfare and deserves the condemnation of all good men.

Friendly Advice.

At this season of the year,
With prospects dull and drear,
Then the business man or
Merchant, who is wise, wise, wise,
Will not tarry long to think,
But taking pen and ink.
Will indite a showy card
To advertize, ize, ize.
And when he wants to know,
Where the showy card should go.
To catch the buyer's eye and Win his trade, ade, ade.
Why, then, the proper caper,
Is to see his local paper.
And insert an advertisement,
Well displayed, played, played.

THE LIBRARY ENTERTAINMENT.

The ladies' Library Association inaugurated their series of public entertainments for the present season, on Friday evening last. It would hardly be doing the affair justice to call it simply a success. It was more than a mere formal success. It was a rouser. The exercises were quite varied in character, but none the less interesting on that account.

The refreshment department of course was one of the leading features, and the tables were well patronized during the entire evening. The booth of fancy articles was another center of attraction. Mrs. L. P. Tribou had charge of this table and the store of trinkets donated for the occasion had all been converted into cash before 10 o'clock. The music—well, there was music till you could'nt rest. The city band was present in full force, and Prof. Ahren's orchestra, assisted by Miss Jennie Root at the piano, ran a neck and neck race with the band to see which could gain the most plaudits from the audience. Both had their champions and both acquitted themselves with more than usual credit.

But the dime museum walked off with the whole bakery. All the characters enumerated in last week's HERALD were found in the collection and many more besides. The portion of the hall set apart for the museum was crowded to suffocation for nearly two hours, and as the sight-seers passed along in procession their exclamations of surprise, wonder and inquiry were comical in the extreme. The young men composing the minstrel troupe displayed abilities worthy of professionals, and their exhibits of singing and dancing brought down the house.

The two committees having general charge of the affair, and upon whom most of the work of preparation devolved, were these.

Executive com.—Mr. and Mrs. L. P. Tribou, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Freeman, Misses Kate Anderson, Allie Satterthwaite and May DeWolf.

Museum com.—S. P. Hosmer, Will R. Hayden, Misses Allie Satterthwaite, May DeWolf, Mabel Hayden, Asenath Hosmer.

These two committees appointed their assistants and allotted the work to each. The helpers who assisted at the tables and who assumed characters in the dime museum must have exceeded fifty altogether. The gross receipts of the evening reached nearly $[illegible].00 and the net proceeds were about $35, which will replenish the treasury of the association. Too much credit cannot be awarded to the committees in charge of the arrangements. The liberal outcome of this entertainment should stimulate the officers to give the public another treat or two before the advent of April showers.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Remember the social hop at Armory hall to-night.

Mrs. A. J. North returned Tuesday from a visit in central Illinois.

Frederick Mertz has sold the Central hotel property to James Monaghan of Detroit.

A. W. Slayton has procured a valuable assistant in answering letters, one of Edison's Mimeographs." It works like a charm.

V. J. Woodard's toboggan slide is now in fine condition, and it will be open each afternoon and evening during favorable weather.

Little Miss Julia Brown has remembered the editor with a gift of a beautiful photograph of her little twin sisters Lucille and Lurette. Thanks.

The omnibus bill admitting five territories into the compact of States has passed the House and goes to the Senate. The indications now are that it will be defeated in that body.

Born in Tecumseh, Jan. 23, 1882. Died at her parents' home in Lansing, Jan. 19, 1889. Such was the brief span allotted to Madge Dingman Fitzsimmons. Yet in that short time she seemed to live a life time of love and helpfulness. Hillsdale county papers please copy.

The movement began several months ago, to procure a restoration of the charter of Tecumseh Lodge R. A. M. has finally been crowned with success. Many of the brethren "took a hand in," but to John Hicks belongs the lion's share of the credit. When he resolves on doing a thing he generally gets there.

As our distant friends send in their subscription for the new year they always take occasion to express kind words for our continued welfare. J. H. Darling of Duluth says; "May this new year be one of prosperity to the HERALD and all who are connected with it." He isn't particular whether he gets a Webster's unabridged or a gold watch as a premium.

Deerfield and Dundee both have cases of small pox on their hands, but the disease has not made its appearance at Tecumseh. The prompt measures taken by our public authorities will do much to allay excitement and will undoubteldy have the effect of keeping the plague beyond our borders. There is no cause at this date for any apprehension.

The K. of L. Hall was well filled last evening by members of the society and others to hear the address of T. Sheriff, of Kalamazoo. Mr. Sheriff is State Secretary of the organization, and gave a clean solid speech, bristling with facts, and devoid of politics. He dwelt on corporations, and gave a description of the co-operative plan as tried in the different countries. The K. of L. lodge of Tecumseh is in a flourishing condition and we understand this is only the first of a series of speeches to be given by prominent labor speekers

Do you want to go to New York for 20 cents, and make a round of the different amusements indulged in by the inhabitants of the great metropolis? We have just returned from such a trip, and must admit that we were charmed. We did not go in person, but our minds were carried there by reading the beautiful illustrated article on the "Amusements of New York City" in the February number of Demorest's Monthly Magazine, which has just arrived. In glancing through this world famed Family Magazine we can account for its immense circulation. The February number contains a water-color, "To the Rescue!" beautifully executed, and over a hundred other illustrations of a high order. While excellent stories are introduced to amuse, the practical articles are of great merit; and just at this season the "Etiquette of Balls and Dancing Parties" will be found of service.

John Hicks went to Detroit Monday.

Rev. J. M. Getchell, pastor of the Universalist church, has been given by some friends, an Oleograph, (after a painting by the celebrated European artist, DeBuffe) which represents the principal scenes in the parable, the Prodigal Son. The original painting which was about 60 ft. long and 18 ft. high was destroyed by fire in Melodeon hall, Cincinnati, a few years ago. The oleograph is nearly 4 ft. long and 3 ft. high. It was nicely framed by Jas. Montague at the novelty store.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE from time to time has useful articles on house decoration, one of which is to be found in the February number. John Habberton entitles it "Bulb Gardens Indoors," and Mr. William Hamilton Gibson, with his six illustrations, makes the reader almost sensible of what the author affirms in regard to the luxuriant bloom, color, and fragrance of "Dutch" bulbs. A house decorated in the manner which the artist has depicted in his drawing on page 365 would be a house beautiful. There is no bleak window but might take on this Italian sunniness of aspect even in the depth of winter.

At the last session of the Grand Chapter, which met only a few weeks ago, at Grand Rapids, the old charter of Tecumseh, No. 42, R. A. Hicks, acting under the authority of the Grand Chapter with L. Lilley as Grand Marshall.

DIED—In Oro Grande, Dec. 26th, 1888, of Cholera Infantum, Donna M., only child of Milton S. and Jennie M. Pitzer aged 2 years and 9 months.

Never has a sadder event occurred in this community than the death of little Donna Pitzer, on Wednesday of last week, after an illness of only a few hours. So sudden a death would be a blow to parents under any circumstances; but Donna was an only child, and was so bright and winning and was such a comfort to her parents, especially to her invalid mother, of whom she was the constant companion, that her death is exceedingly sad. The afflicted parents have the heartfelt sympathy of the entire community.

The above notice is taken from the Mojave River Enterprise, published at Oro Grande, Cal. Many of our citizens will remember Mrs. Pitzer as Miss Janie Monaghan, and will deeply sympathise with her in this hour of her affliction.

HIGH SCHOOL HAPPENINGS.

The two leading questions of the day: Have you been vaccinated? How is your arm?

Notwithstanding the fact that last Saturday was about the coldest day we have had this year, two of our classmates had the grit to take a bath in the red pond.

We understand that sickness has prevented Miss Kate Tallman from being with us so far this term.

We are sorry to know that on account of ill health, Miss Eliza Crowell is obliged to give up school.

Two of last year's graduates, Eugene Tremaine and Claude VanTine visited school Wednesday afternoon.

Skates have disappeared and toboggans have come to light.

An interesting essay from which much good advice could be taken, was read by May Morrison in chapel last Friday.

To relieve Fred Boyd from the charge of writing the "High School Happenings," I wish to say that although the letters T. B. F. partly correspond to his initials, they have no connection with his name.

TECUMSEH & FRANKLIN FARMERS' CLUB.

The club met at Mr. H. Hoag's on the evening of Jan. 16th. The night being stormy the attendance was small. The literary part of the program was furnished by the ladies, and as they did not want to be out done by the gentlemen who have the program next time, those who did attend were well paid for going. The question: "Practicability of small fruit for the farmer" was opened by Mr. H. Wilson, and was earnestly discussed by the gentlemen. Among the visitors was Mr. Niles, a horticulturist from Blissfield, who gave some very interesting items; one was that the worm that works on the currant and gooseberry bushes works on the under part of the leaves and thought that was the reason why people did not have success in using Helebore sprinkled on top of bushes. He thot the cherry currant was most profitable for the farmer. The club adjourned to meet in two weeks at Andrew Wilson's Jr., with the the following program:

Song—C. Bramble, Andrew Wilson, Henry Wilson and Menzo VanValkenburg.
Sel. Read.—Mr. Hurry.
Rec.—Henry Wilson.
Cond. Novel—Mr. H. Hoag.
Essay—C. Bramble.
Song—Ed. Oliver.
Charade—Geo. Swartz.
Question—Is the Grange any benefit to the farmer? Opened by Will Waldron, followed by Mr. Hurry and others.

An unpleasant passenger in a street car is a crying baby. In such cases Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup should be given to the little sufferer to ease its troubles. Price only 25 cents a bottle.

CLIPPINGS AND CONDENSATIONS.

The Republican State Convention will meet at Detroit on the 21st of February.

Coal has been discovered on the farm of Charles Randolph, six miles west of Addison.

There is a mad dog epidemic in Adrian, and the council is called upon to take vigorous measures to stop the nuisance.

The Addison Courier asks this question:

Why cannot Addison secure a connection with the Commercial telegraph system, now so generally used in the eastern part of the county?

In its editorial department the Detroit Free Press, has eleven persons whose service averages over seventeen years. The managing editor was engaged in 1865; the editor-in-chief in 1861.

The American Tariff Reform League will hold a national convention in Chicago on Feb. 19, 20 and 21. Delegates will be present from all the states and it will be a very important gathering of the friends of reform.

Representative Miner T. Cole, of Palmyra, in a letter to the Grange Visitor, has the following to say: "The House will probably again pass the two cent per mile bill, but it is thought that the Senate is loaded to block legislation affecting the finances of railway companies."

The Hudson Post has a correspondent at "Hardscrabble." Where in—that is where out of—well, where is Hardscrabble?—Adrian Press.

Hardscrabble is bounded on the north by a line fence; on the south by Widow Jackson's cornfield; on the east by the road; on the west by the boundary line. Everybody in eastern Hillsdale and western Lenawee knows where it is.—Post.

After twelve years of faithful service as manager of the temperance dining rooms at Adrian, Mrs. A. N. Redfield has retired and the position will hereafter be filled by Mrs. Walter Jones, of Raisin Valley. Her numerous friends all over the county will miss her genial face and quiet ways at the temperance headquarters, but they will heartily wish her many years of comfort and happiness in her declining days.

At the closing session of the Lenawee County Teacher's Association, Saturday afternoon, the election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows:

Pres.—Prof. G. W. Walker.
Vice Pres.—Prof. F. R. Hathaway.
Sec. and Treas.—Miss Nellie Aldrich.

The executive committee consists of the above named officers, Miss Nellie D. Rogers, of Blissfield; and W. E. Hopkins, Clinton. The next meeting will be held in May. The date will be fixed by the executive committee.

The people in the southern part of the state cannot understand why they should pay five cents per gallon for kerosene oil more than their neighbors in Ohio, when the Ohio oil is a better illuminator and apparently no more dangerous. Here is a pointer for a Lenawee county legislator to make a state reputation by introducing and having passed a bill lowering the the test to the Ohio standard and saving the people thousands of dollars.—Blissfield Advance.

Mr. Ira Havens is a printer. He is employed in the Times office. When he went home the other night he took a nice ham for boiling with him. How it happened that a printer could take a ham with him, when he went home, we are not prepared to state. Nevertheless, he did. He hung it up in the back kitchen, and went to sleep—the sleep of the innocent. A dog, a mean, measley cur—slipped in and persuaded that ham to go along with him. It went. Ira is now looking for the ham and the cur with a revolver and a revengeful turn of mind.—Times.

According to Mr. Lorbrop Mohammedans are employed as waiters in the restaurants of Russia because their religion does not permit them to drink alcoholic liquor. This not only enables them to remain sober while their customers are getting drunk, but it saves the proprietor from all anxiety about any "leakage from his casks, demijons or bottles. A tippling waiter or bartender will easily knock off the profits of the best paying bar or restaurant, and the proprietors of these places naturally want the other kind of help. It would pay them in this country to hire total abstainers and prohibitionists. They would agree on one point: they are both opposed to high license.—Evening News.

Says the Toledo Bee in its railroad news: "A bill will be introduced in the Michigan legislature in a few days to compel the Lake Shore to either operate or abandon that portion of the old Chicago & Canada Southern track lying between Dundee and Grosvenor. Both the stockholders and the Lake Shore will make a vigorous fight against the bill, as it has been the plan of the Lake Shore to continue the old Canada Southern westward from Fayette. It is said that the Lake Shore now has charges enough against the property for maintenance to absorb it."

Wednesday evening, Jan. 16, 1889, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Morrell, of Macon, Mich. became beautifully the scene of interest and admiration, when their youngest daughter Lillie L. Though the roads were exceedingly heavy, a large company of friends were present between the hours of six and seven. Resolutions of Respect.

Inasmuch as it has pleased the All-wise disposer of events to suddenly remove from among our numbers a highly esteemed and valuable member, Miss Minnie Rector, whose death occurred at her home in Clinton, on the 7th day of December, 1888. Therefore

Resolved That to her relatives and especially to her own family we extend our most sincere and heartfelt sympathy and beg to share with them their grief in this our common loss.

Joseph Heald, a prominent manufacturer and business man of Grand Rapids, is dead at the age of 65 years. He had accumulated $250,000 since coming to the state in 1853.

A Carleton Center couple went to Lansing recently to see the sights, and began operations by blowing out the gas. When they recovered sufficiently to realize the situation they hastily made tracks for home.

A Jackson family of five persons were seriously poisoned by eating of a holiday turkey that is of late somewhat too ancient to be palatable. It required a doctor's bill large enough to have bought several healthy turkeys, to bring them out all right.

Frank McDonald, a Flint fellow, who was caught in the act of helping himself to valuables in a store of that city, was so thoroughly convinced that it were better to desert when a bullet crashed through the show case at which he was operating. Frank is a bachelor boarder, now.

The Rockford doctor who tried a wrestling bout with "the boys" just for a little innocent sport, has since been nursing three broken ribs. When he gets well he'll attend to mending other people's bones, instead of breaking his own.

John Bell, a Kalamazoo county pedagogue, has engaged in teaching a district school on Grand Prairie, but isn't having altogether smooth sailing. Two or three weeks ago somebody tried to plant a bullet in his anatomy, and the other day the same scheme was repeated—both balls coming too close to their mark for comfort. As John has no known enemies, he's at a loss to account for the attempted assassination.

A Grand Rapids chap who has been a public charge for some time past, has been found to have a nice wad of money stowed away in his shanty residence. It nearly broke his heart, but public assistance has stopped nevertheless.

A Buchanan business man went to supper the other night without locking his safe, and while he was filling his stomach, another chap was lining his pockets with the merchant's cash, to the tune of $200.

An Ishpeming chap caught on to the fact that a fellow workman had saved up $150, with which to bring his parents over from Ireland, and getting his hands on the money, skipped.

A Shelby man applied to the town authorities for a coffin for a dead relative, but was greatly offended because a high-priced article with expensive trimmings wasn't furnished. Some folks are very particular about the presents they receive.

The Kalamazoo postoffice now ranks third in the state in the amount of business transacted, and Celeryvilleites are bound to maintain their record, even if they are compelled to sit up nights to do it.

The addition of an English and Latin course to the programme of the Concord high school has drawn in some fifty outside pupils, making about 200 in all.

John Harris, an Elmore man, has asked the D., L. & N. Railway company to pay him $10,000 for injuries received while hacking telegraph poles, nearly two years ago. The company is waiting to hear a jury's opinion of the claim before deciding on what they'll do about it.

A Fremont man, named Decker, tried to end his life with an iron bar, but his wife got it away from him, whereupon the dejected husband went down to a neighboring spring and diving in drank to his death. The desire for the shadowy hence seems to be unusually strong with some people.

After the Grand Rapids postoffice had been closed for business the other night, the janitor shouldered his broom for a sweep, when a sick chap slid in and pocketed $50 worth of stamps and a bundle of registered letters from the postmaster's private office, and then silently faded away.

While a Saginaw City undertaking firm was professionally engaged the other day, a chap imbued with a desire for some cash stepped in and helped himself to $75 worth of the "needful."

A Shelby farmer claims to own a tree that bears nice large apples one year, and nothing but crab apples the next. The same tree manifests other little freaks, such as blossoming in the fall of the year, putting out red leaves in late autumn, etc.

Robert Gregg, a "Soo" citizen, set up a target on an old building and blazed at it to test the accuracy of his aim. It proved to be good, for he not only laid out the target, but a tramp also, who happened to be bid away on the inside of the building, at the time.

A DESPERATE YOUNG GIRL.

She Kills Her Lover's Mother and Then Commits Suicide.

FAYETTE, Mo., Jan. 21.—This town was thrown into a state of intense excitement Saturday morning over a fearful tragedy. About 10 o'clock Flora, the beyear old daughter of William Rohr, shot Mrs. E. J. Johnson through the back. She then turned and shot herself through the head. The weapon used was a Colt's revolver. The girl died instantly, and the old lady was alive. The girl and Miller Johnson, a son of Mrs. Johnson, were sweethearts and the mother quarreled with the girl and tried to break off the engagement. Friday night the lovers met clandestinely, but Saturday morning Mrs. Johnson learned of it, and called to the girl, who lived in an adjoining house. A Burning Lake in Indiana.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Jan. 17.—Near New Paris, Elkhart county, Indiana, a small lake is burning and is emitting a peculiar sulphurous [illegible]. The community is excited and those living near the lake are preparing to leave the place. The lake is about a half [illegible] in diameter. The fire covers the entire surface, with a steady blaze [illegible]. No smoke is perceptible. Several theories are suggested, the most plausible of which is that a vein of oil near the surface has burst under the pond, and that the oil is on the surface, where it was set on fire by a spark from a burning log, and that as the oil continues to rise it keeps burning upon the surface.

Centennial of Washington's Inauguration.

NEW YORK, Jan. 19.—The committee on plan and scope of the centennial celebration of the inauguration of Washington held an important meeting at the rooms of the executive committee Saturday. The subscriptions received from members of the committee amount to $13,200. The committee on railways reported that it had arranged to have the various governors and state commissioners sail to Elizabethport to meet President Harrison on the morning of April 30, and accompany him to the foot of Wall st. Nervous Diseases.

There are more nervous than blood diseases. Thus, a weakness of the nerves of the brain causes headache, fits, dizziness, sleeplessness, etc.; as weakness of the nerves of the stomach causes dyspepsia, pain, wind, etc.; of the lungs, makes "weak lungs;" of the liver produces biliousness, constipation, etc.; of the womb induces irregularities, sterility, pains, etc.; of the sexual organs, impotency, etc. For all weaknesses Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine surpasses all other remedies. Cough medicines, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is in greater demand than ever. No preparation for Throat and Lung Troubles is so prompt in its effects, so agreeable to the taste, and so widely known as this. It is the family medicine in thousands of households.

"I have suffered for years from a bronchial trouble that, whenever I take cold or am exposed to inclement weather, shows itself by a very annoying tickling sensation in the throat and by difficulty in breathing. I have tried a great many remedies, but none does so well as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral which always gives prompt relief in returns of my old complaint."—Ernest A. Hepler, Inspector of Public Roads, Parish Terre Bonne, La.

☞ I consider Ayer's Cherry Pectoral a most important remedy

For Home Use.

I have tested its curative power, in my family, many times during the past thirty years, and have never known it to fail. It will relieve the most serious affections of the throat and lungs, whether in children or adults."—Mrs. E. G. Edgerly, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

"Twenty years ago I was troubled with a disease of the lungs. Doctors afforded me no relief and considered my case hopeless. I then began to use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, before I had finished one bottle, found relief. I continued to take this medicine until a cure was effected. I believe that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved my life."—Samuel Griggs, Waukegan, Ill.

"Six years ago I contracted a severe cold which settled on my lungs and soon developed all the alarming symptoms of Consumption. I had a cough, night sweats, bleeding of the lungs, pains in chest and sides, and was so prostrated as to be confined to my bed most of the time. After trying various prescriptions, without benefit, my physician finally determined to give me Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took it, and the effect was magical. I seemed to rally from the first dose of this medicine, and, after using only three bottles, am as well and sound as ever."—Rodney Johnson, Springfield, Ill.

PARDON AND HEALING.

LESSON IV, FIRST QUARTER INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JAN. 27.

Text of the Lesson Mark ii. 1-12—Commit Verses 10-12—Golden Text, Psalms ciii, 3—Commentary by the Rev. B. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly, by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

1. "And again He entered into Capernaum." The joy of the leper who had been healed led him, notwithstanding the command of the Saviour, to blaze abroad the fact of his being healed, and such multitudes flocked to Jesus that he had to leave the city and withdraw into the wilderness, where Luke tells us He prayed (Luke v, 16), and Mark says that even there they came to Him from every quarter. (Mark i, 45.) But now, after some days, He returns to Capernaum, and the news of His return is soon spread abroad. When He went at one time into the borders of Tyre and Sidon He entered into an house and would have no man know it, but He could not be hid. (Mark vii, 24.) How is it that today He seems to be hid in the homes and lives of so many who profess to have received Him? Why is it not clearly manifest that He is in us if indeed He is? Let each one's heart reply.

2. "And straightway many were gathered together, insomuch that there was no room to receive them." In Luke v, 17, it is said that there were Pharisees and doctors of the law sitting by, which were come out of every town of Galilee and Judea and Jerusalem; and the power of the Lord was present to heal them. But though there was such power present, these Pharisees and doctors were not healed, for they had no idea that they needed healing.

3. "And they come unto him, bringing one sick of the palsy, which was borne of four." While these blind, self righteous Pharisees and doctors, who might be healed if they only knew their need, are listening to His wonderful words, here is a case for the manifestation of His wonderful power—a case of realized and manifest need.

4. "They could not come nigh, * * * they uncovered the roof, * * * they let down the bed wherein the sick of the palsy lay." Luke v, 19, says they let him down through the tiling, with his couch, into the midst before Jesus. Here is zeal and determination sure to accomplish its end if it be at all possible to be accomplished.

5. "When Jesus saw their faith." Without faith it is impossible to please God (Heb. xi, 6), but confidence in Him does always please Him for "the eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth to show Himself strong in behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward Him" (II Chr. xvi, 9); and how often we hear Him say, "According to your faith," "As thou hast believed," apparently making the measure of blessing we enjoy to be just in proportion to the measure of our faith in him. When we consider the record in Heb. xi, and in the history of the kings of Judah who relied upon God, may we not with good reason ask ourselves, "Do I act as if I had faith in God?"

"He said unto the sick of the palsy, Son, thy sins be forgiven thee." Matt. ix, 2, says that He also added, "Be of good cheer." What power there is in a word of encouragement, and how many we might drop by the way as we journey on if we were not so self absorbed, but more filled with the Spirit of Christ, who went about doing good, so forgetful of self; and then how kindly He addresses the sick man—no word of rebuke either to him or his friends because of their seemingly rude intrusion and sudden interruption of His discourse, but a most kindly and encouraging greeting.

6. "The scribes sitting there were reasoning in their hearts." They were His enemies, they did not believe in Him, they knew Him not.

7. "Who can forgive sins but God only?" (II Cor. x, 5, margin.) Why, of course no one can, but here in this house, and in this man, was God manifest in the flesh, and they knew it not. There they sit criticising, condemning, sitting in judgment upon Him who will one day be their judge, but now desires to be their Saviour and their King. Will they not say in that day, "Oh, if we had only known!" Well, if they had only compared the words and deeds and well known history of this man with the testimony of their prophets they might have been convinced that this was He of whom the prophets spake.

8. "Jesus perceived in His spirit that they so reasoned within themselves." Some one has called this "mind reading extraordinary," and indeed it is. How could He tell what they were thinking about in their hearts? Just for the same reason that He could forgive sins, because He was God. Of Him it is written, "Thou understandest my thought afar off. There is not a word on my tongue, but lo, O Lord, Thou knowest it altogether," (Ps. cxxxix, 2, 4); and He Himself has said, "I know the things that come into your mind, every one of them." (Ezek. xi, 5.)

9. "Whether is it easier to say to the sick of the palsy, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Arise, and take up thy bed and walk?" Either would require more than human power, and either result would prove Him more than man; and yet a physician might heal by skill and medicine the disease, while only God could forgive sins; and in this case, sin being evidently the cause of the disease, the cause must be removed if a cure would be effected. As to the words used, it was as easy to say the one as the other, but there must be the power behind the words.

10. "The Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins." Now if only God can forgive sins, who is this Son of Man? In the Eighth Psalm He is spoken of as having dominion, and all things put under Him. In the Holy Spirit's commentary upon Ps. viii, in Heb. ii, we find that this Jesus is the Son of Man; and in I Cor. xv, where He is called the last Adam, it is said that He must reign till He hath put all enemies under His feet, and that the last enemy to be destroyed is death. Then in Dan. vii, 13, we are told that it is after the judgment of the nations, and the destruction of the blasphaming Antichrist that the Son of Man is to receive His kingdom and dominion over all the earth which shall never be destroyed. This Son of Man, then, is the man holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners, who by virtue of His perfect holiness is qualified to be a sin offering, the sinners' substitute; and who by virtue of His sacrifice soon to be consummated is authorized to proclaim the forgiveness of sins to all who come humbly to Him; and who because of the dominion given unto Him shall cleanse this whole earth from every result of Adam's sin, of which thorough cleansing these miracles of healing are but a foretaste.

11. "I say unto thee." In the days of Moses and the prophets it was "The Lord spake," or "Thus saith the Lord," but here is the Lord Himself, His glory veiled, but His power and majesty flashing out from the body of His humiliation; what shall it be when when we see Him in His glory, and having become like Him, shall be commissioned to administer with Him the affairs of His kingdom?

12. "Immediately he arose, took up the bed, and went forth before them all." A thorough work, quickly done, and manifest to all.

THE WEEK IN CONGRESS.

Work of the National Solons at Washington City.

WASHINGTON CITY, Jan. 16.—Most of yesterday was consumed in the senate in a discussion of Vest's amendment to the tariff bill to put salt on the free list, but the bill was laid aside without action on the amendment, and an executive session held, at the conclusion of which the senate adjourned.

The admission of territories was discussed in the house, but no action reached. Springer called up the senate bill for the admission of South Dakota, and said a new vote should be taken, as the ratification of the constitution, as only about half the voters of the territory had exercised their right the last time. Gifford opposed this and Toole of Montana demanded the admission of his territory. The debate was still on when at 4:50 p. m. the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Jan. 17.—Messages were received by the senate yesterday from the president relating to affairs in Hayti and Samoa. Large rolls of red cloth adorned half the desks. They contained petitions sent by the N. C. T. U. in favor of Sunday observance and were signed by thousands of citizens. Riddleberger presented them but said he was opposed to the petition contained in them as his constituents had to send their cattle to the Washington market by Sunday trains in order to have them here by Tuesday. Chandler presented additional petitions from South Carolina asking that the right of suffrage be protected. Conference reports on the bills for public buildings at San Francisco, Milwaukee, and Omaha were agreed to. The site of the Milwaukee building is to cost not more than $400,000, that of Omaha the same. An appropriation of $600,000 is made to begin work at Omaha. The tariff bill was then taken up and the free salt amendment rejected. The duty on cross-cut saws was raised about 25 per cent., and then a long debate took place on the duty on tin, pending which the senate adjourned.

The house debated the territories admission question without action all day. A resolution was adopted asking the treasury why a British vessel was employed to excavate a ship channel in New York harbor. Columbus, O., was made a port of delivery. Adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Jan. 18.—Tin plate and sugar were the subjects of a great portion of the talk in the senate yesterday, and one result was the adoption of the amendment increasing the duty on tin plates. The sugar bounty amendment was then taken up. During the debate Allison said the proposed amendment would give about $23,000,000 to the consumers of sugar in this country. The debate lasted all the remainder of the session except the time taken for a short executive session, and adjournment was reached without action at 5:40 p m.

The house received notice from Governor Gray, of Indiana, of the resignation as a member of congress of A. P. Hovey from the First district of that State. The territorial admission bill was then taken up and after a long debate the "omnibus" bill was substituted for that of the senate, and then the Democratic caucus bill substituted for the "omnibus" bill. McDonald of Minnesota then offered as a substitute for the latter a bill embodying the principal features of the "omnibus" bill, but providing for the immediate admission of South Dakota, and pending its reading the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Jan. 19.—Frye's credentials as senator from Maine were filed in the senate yesterday and then the interminable tariff debate was resumed on the sugar bounty clause. The Democrats, Reagan leading, opposed it on the constitutional ground, while the Republicans defended its constitutionality. A vote was finally reached and the clause was carried—27 to 23—Payne of Ohio voting with the Republicans, and Quay voting "no" with the Democrats. The bill making Columbus, O., a port of delivery was passed, and the senate adjourned.

The house rejected McDonald's amendment to the omnibus bill and adopted one by Springer providing that if at the election on the question of division, provided for in the act, the Sioux Falls constitution shall be affirmed, said constitution shall be re-submitted to South Dakota for ratification or rejection together with several other matters connected with state government. He wanted an immediate vote, but the Republicans filibustered him out of that notion, and the amendment was amended by adding a clause that when the constitution is finally ratified the president shall issue a proclamation declaring South Dakota admitted. The same clause was added to the Montana section and the bill passed—133 to 120. The bill being an amendment to the senate bill a vote on the passage of the senate bill as amended resulted—ayes, 144; nays, 98. An evening session was held at which thirty private pension bills were passed.

WASHINGTON CITY, Jan. 21.—The credentials of Hoar as senator from Massachusetts were presented in the senate Saturday and filed. Those of Anthony Higgins, from Delaware, were sent to the election committee on the suggestion made by Edmunds that they were not according to the law. The tariff bill was resumed and the duty on cheap table and pen knives, guns and pistols increased. Brown offered an amendment increasing the duty on rice, etc., and it was laid over because of the absence of Butler of South Carolina. A few other paragraphs were disposed of, and then, after a brief executive session, the senate adjourned.

The house passed the senate bill providing for circuit courts in several southern districts, and agreed to a conference report making the "age of consent" in the District 16 years, and providing penalties for violation of the law. The bill to regulate immigration was reported, the fortification bill passed and the remainder of the session devoted to eulogies on the late E. W. Robertson, of Louisiana. Appropriate resolutions on the subject were adopted, and the house, as a further mark of respect, adjourned.

Canada Railroad Scheme.

QUEBEC, Can., Jan. 19.—It is proposed to build a railroad from this city to a point on the Ottawa river. Complete communication between Quebec and Gaspe is part of the scheme. The Northern Pacific railway controls an independent line from the west to Quebec, and connection is proposed by a fast line of steamers. Capitalists in Minneapolis are said to be interested in the scheme. The same parties are applying to the Ontario legislature for permission to construct a line from Sault Ste. Marie to a point in Ottawa.

The British Extradition Treaty.

WASHINGTON CITY, Jan. 16.—In the executive session of the senate Tuesday, the British extradition treaty was made a special order for Tuesday, Jan 29. The nominations of Capt. Scott and Lieut. Hay, to be commissioners of subsistence, were confirmed.

Many Men Out on Strike.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 18.—The men at Sayer & Scoville's carriage factory struck Friday morning on account of wages. The strikes in three factories in this city are now affecting 1,500 men.

Five boys, ranging in age from 10 to 15 years, were caught at Minneapolis, Minn., Thursday night in an attempt to burglarize a candy store.

is the reason people will not, can not, cannot see any difference in cheap nostrums put up by Cheap John houses or irresponsible parties at enormous profits rather than take a medicine of world wide reputation and one that is giving universal satisfaction at equal price? Michigan Legislature.

LANSING, Mich., Jan. 16.—In the house a petition was received from the residents of Kalkaska county stating that the lumber camps in the county elect their own officers, though they are not legal voters, and then when the lumber season is over leave the county without officers. Relief is asked. A bill was introduced providing that when more than the legal rate of interest is charged on a loan, only the entire interest shall be forfeited instead of the entire debt.

The senate passed the bill providing imprisonment for life for setting fire to mines. Notice was given of bills to establish the indeterminate sentence and parole system for wrong doers; to consolidate the management of the three state prisons; to compel railways to announce at all stations whether passenger trains are on time.

LANSING, Mich., Jan. 17.—The legislature at noon yesterday in joint convention ratified the selection of James McMillan for United States senator. An Increase of Lumber.

DETROIT, Jan. 16.—C. H. Bradley, a heavy dealer, and one of the best posted lumbermen in the Saginaw valley, said Tuesday: "We now have on the docks about 35,000,000 feet of lumber against 302,000,000 last winter. The increase is due chiefly to the fact that the boats stopped running earlier and the mills were all operated later than in the fall of 1887, owing to the more favorable weather. Prices are a shade higher than at the close of navigation, and some holders decline to give figures at all, because they want to first ascertain probabilities as to the output of logs. Nearly every winter there is this same cry that the log crop will be a short one, and every spring the supply is always fully equal to if not in excess of the demand.

A Wanderer Returns Home.

STURGIS, Mich., Jan. 17.—Fifteen years ago Charles Miner, then 19 years of age, left his home in Sturgis to travel through the country peddling. He was robbed and rather than return home empty handed went west and never wrote to his people. He spent three years in Australia and then returned to Tacoma, W. T., where he gathered a comfortable fortune. Monday he was in Bronson in search of tidings from the old folks. He found that they had moved to Paw Paw and were living on a farm, and that not a death had occurred in the family since he left home. He will go to them at once.

Suit Against a Michigan Road.

DETROIT, Mich., Jan. 19.—Dally & McRae, railroad contractors of Detroit, began suit in Wayne circuit court Friday against the Grand Rapids, Lansing & Detroit Railroad company for $500,000 damages. The plaintiffs in 1887 built about seventy miles of the company's road between Grand Rapids and Grand Ledge. The company failed to designate the road promptly, the plaintiffs assert, and the result was that the work went over into the winter, when frost was in the ground, and the cost of excavating was much greater than it otherwise would have been.

Any person not entitled to the bounty herein provided for who shall apply for or receive the same, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine not exceeding $5,000 or be imprisoned for a period not exceeding five years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Michigan in Mourning

Her Lieutenant Governor Killed in a Railway Wreck

WITH TWO OTHER PROMINENT MEN.

The Distinguished Victim Has His Arm Torn Off and Dies in an Hour—His Two Companions Instantly Killed—A Business Trip Where Death Went Along—Others Badly Wounded—Bad Bridge Accident—Twenty Men Drowned.

DETROIT, Mich., Jan. 18.—The lieutenant governor of this state, Hon. Josiah M. Turner, was killed in an accident on the Chicago & Northwestern railway saturday afternoon about 2 o'clock, at Elmwood on the Menominee branch of the road. Besides the lieutenant governor two other very prominent citizens lost their lives. The rear coach of a passenger train was derailed, and tipped over, being dragged several hundred feet before the engineer could check the train.

When the rescuers got to work the following victims were found: J. H. MacDonald, of Escanaba, Mich., lieutenant governor of this state; Horace Tuttle, president of the Commonwealth Iron company, and member of the firm of Tuttle, Ogiesby & Co., Cleveland; William S. Cochrane, of Escanaba, recently of Hamilton, Ontario, and prime mover in establishing the extensive works of the Cochrane Mining company at Escanaba, of which Governor MacDonald was the leading financial backer.

The dangerously injured were: Edwin P. Foster, of Iron Mountain, superintendent of several mines in the district, and a well-known mining man; Conductor Henry Armstrong, of Escanaba, who has had cuts about the head and body; Baggage Master McClure and his 18-year-old daughter; Mrs. Perry Beaser, of Ashland, Wis., some injured very badly; Mrs. McClure, of Watersmeet, wife of a train brakeman, badly cut and severe internal injury; Mrs. E. P. Foster, of Iron Mountain, severe cut in the head and injury to spine; one of the brakemen, whose name was not learned.

All the other passengers were frightened and many hurt.

Mr. O. C. Davidson, of Commonwealth, at the time of the accident was playing cards with Lieutenant Governor MacDonald, Mr. Tuttle and Mr. Cochrane. He said that the first intimation that he had that anything was wrong was a jolting sensation. The car then swayed two or three times, and then turned on its side. He remembered nothing more until he found himself 200 or 300 feet in the rear of the train in the snow. It seems that the car in turning over struck a stump, which penetrated it between the men who were playing cards. Mr. Tuttle, who was seated in the seat to the rear of the table, was instantly killed, his neck being broken. Mr. MacDonald was in the same seat with him, and his arm was torn out at the shoulder, and was found at least forty feet from the body. He lived about an hour and was conscious for a few minutes.

The news sent a shock through the community. Leaving here Saturday morning, Messrs. Cochrane and MacDonald were in the very best of spirits and anxious to complete arrangements to start the roller mills in a couple of weeks. Mr. MacDonald has been very active in the advancement of this city, but his useful career has been cut off when he was most needed. For this family there is naught but earnest sympathy. The bodies of the deceased were brought here Saturday evening.

By the death of James Hugh MacDonald Michigan loses a citizen who has always done her honor. He was a self-made man, rising from the very humblest rank in life to one of the foremost positions in the political and financial circles of this state. He was born in Scotland in 1832, came to the United States in 1848, and was first employed as a delivery clerk in a general merchandising establishment in a small town in Pennsylvania. He was afterward employed for two or three years as a laborer on one of the Pennsylvania railroads. In 1854 he removed to Ohio, where he remained three years and then went to Wisconsin. In 1857 he was chopping wood in the latter state on the La Crosse & Milwaukee railroad at 50 cents a cord. In 1859 he went to Cuba as foreman of a railway construction force, and four years later came to Michigan and entered the employ of the Chicago & Northwestern railway in the capacity of a laborer. He worked his way upward by meritorious endeavor, and in 1865 was employed to take charge of a construction department of the Mineral Range railway. He afterward returned to the employ of the Chicago & Northwestern, and later on was made roadmaster. In 1876 he resigned from the railway employ, became interested in mining matters, and the owner of what afterward proved to be a valuable mining property. He was elected lieutenant governor on the Republican ticket in 1886 and re-elected last fall. He leaves an estate estimated at $50,000 to his widow, son and daughter.

The cause of the accident is believed to have been the breaking of a truck.

LANSING, Mich., Jan. 21.—The message informing Governor Luce of the fatal accident to Lieutenant Governor MacDonald contained no particulars. He immediately wired Mrs. MacDonald, extending his sincere sympathy. A proclamation in reference to the sad occurrence will be issued from the executive office.

A BRIDGE TUMBLES TO PIECES.

Twenty Persons Known to Be Drowned—A Steamer's Narrow Escape.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., Jan. 21.—Details were received in this city last night of a railroad bridge accident at Spottsville, Ky., on Green river, in which four people lost their lives. The bridge, which has just been completed for the new Louisville, St. Louis & Texas railroad, was of the draw pattern. Owing to some difficulty between the railroad company and the contractors, the latter secured an injunction Saturday, prohibiting the railroad from using the bridge, and proceeded to remove all of the latter's rails, ties and other property from the bridge, which it is claimed weakened it to such an extent that it caved in yesterday about 1 o'clock. There were about twenty-five people on the bridge at the time. It is definitely known that four of them were precipitated into the water and drowned. The names of the killed are not obtainable and all particulars are very meagre. The bridge in its fall came very near crushing the steamer Gen. Dawes, which was just steaming out from Spottsville.

LATER.—The latest news puts the number of drowned at twenty. There were forty men on the bridge when it collapsed.

John Wanamaker Goes to Europe.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Jan. 21.—John Wanamaker sailed for Europe from New York yesterday on the steamship LaGascogne. He will go to Paris and join Mrs. Wanamaker, who has been stopping for some time past at the French capital, and will return with her in about six weeks. Rumor has it that during his absence a house will be fitted up for him in Washington, which he will take possession of on his return, presumably as a member of President Harrison's cabinet.

ADA LINN.

The Exhibition and Night Cap Social given by the Britton school, last Friday evening, was one of those occasions which make a person "feel as though it was good for them to be there." The exercises were held in G. A. R. Hall, the use of which was kindly donated by the society. Some of the pieces were very fine, and all participants acquitted themselves in a very creditable manner. The recitation of Miss Wilbur was very fine while Aunt Polly was a whole crowd by herself. After this part of the evenings entertainment had subsided the crowd wended their way to Exelby's capacious hall, where the night cap social was held, and where one of those bounteous suppers for which this community are famous, was spread. We followed, curious to see what a night cap social was like. We remembered, for an instant, scenes in our childhood—Peeping from the trundle-bed we had seen that spectral figure robed in white, with close fitting night cap, as our mother "tucked us in" and snuffed out the candle, a genuine "taller dip" at that. We wondered how all these nice girls were going to look in a costume like that, and our mind pictured them standing in a row, each clothed in a candle and night cap, and did not see how there could be much fun about that, but a night cap social ain't like that at all. The old night cap is a thing of the past. The night cap of to-day is a real streaked and speckled, cross-barred, ruffled and tucked affair, that neither hides the pug or bangs of the wearer, and each lady has two, and her best young man buys one of them if he can, if not, some other chap buys it, and that's where the fun comes in for the other chap, as he waltzes off to supper with pug, bangs and night cap of the best young man's Sunday girl. However, Mr. D. B. did not get left in that manner. We won't say what kind of a scheme he worked to get that cap, but he got it all the same. After the caps had got mated up, supper was announced, and, well, you should have been there. Tables that seated nearly a hundred people, were loaded and emptied three different times. The din of the battle was something wonderful and the hearty laugh of John Britton was about the only thing that could get away with it. Charlie Dubois lost his supper, and a good one too which a nice young lady had saved for him. Just as it was set before him, Charlie smiled. Did you ever see Charley smile? Commences way back behind his ears, comes round under his chin and over his forehead and meets just under his nose, and for a few moments Charlie is gone, and you see nothing but a great big smile with a hole in it. When the smile had released Charlie his supper had disappeared, and Charlie had to console himself with the contents of a pickle jar. C. had a good time though, for all that. The supper hall was tastefully decorated by the ladies, assisted by Morris and Neal. Financially the affair was also a success, netting a nice sum to be used for hangings and decorations for the school building. Long live the night caps of 1889. QUAKER.

A Short Record of the Steam Boats of Lake Erie Previous to 1829

It was my good fortune when a boy to be a resident of Buffalo, N. Y. I also learned a little of the sailing art on Lake Erie. With pleasure to me I review a short sketch of over sixty years ago. We will note the first craft with sails on Lake Erie was the Griffin, built by La Salle in the year 1697; first steam boat was Walk in the Water, 1818, Captain Rogers, second steamer, Superior, 300 tons, Sherman captain, 1822; Chippewa, 50 tons, Armstrong, master; 1826, Niagra, 200 tons, Pease, Captain; also Henry Clay, 300 tons, Captain Norton; 1827, Wm. Penn, 300 tons, Wilkinson, Captain; Enterprise, 300 tons Wilkins, Captain; Pioneer, 100 tons, Captain Miles; William Peacock, 150 tons, Captain Hansom. There were nine side-wheel steamers previous to 1829, none of them had cabins or state rooms on deck. Cabin passage was twelve dollars from Buffalo to Detroit on the Superior.

The first boat with state rooms on deck was the Michigan, built at Detroit in 1833, 475 tons, Captain Blake. The three largest sail vessels between 1820 and 1829 were the Erie, Union and Michigan, the last named was sent over Niagra Falls in 1826 with a large collection of animals on board, in view of 5000 spectators. I will here call to mind the largest number of sail vessels of sixty years ago. The British brig Wellington, of Moir, also the Dauntless, of Canada, Commerce, Constitution, Red Jacket, Neucles, Austerlitz, United States, Boliver, Amaranth, William Tell, Marengo, Louisa Jenkins, Andrew, Gov. Case, Good Intent, wrecked twice and crew drowned, and Lady of the Lake. We will not omit to note with cherished good will and many cheerful remembrances a craft on which the writer was a boy-sailor over sixty years ago; a trim built vessel with black hull, painted ports, long raking masts and black yards. Her cabin was beautifully furnished and ornamented on all sides with swords, spears and cutlasses, around her masts were grapling irons and boarding pikes, on the main deck was the monitor gun, on the quarter deck mounted for use, was a swivel cannon, compliment of men in uniform, sixteen. This was the admired and dauntless United States revenue cutter Alexander J. Dallas, built at Erie in 1816, Captain Keith commander.

The writer of this record was for several years personally acquainted with the above named vessels and their captains, except the Griffin.

Mother's Love.

BY IRENE ACKERMAN.

As the flowers that bud and grow
Blooming in affections bed,
Every hour brought to me,
Brought and bound around my head,
Every moment, night and day,
Perfumes mingle with each thought,
Tenderness without reward
On love's altar to me brought.

Brought to me from out the heart,
Made in bouquets rich and rare,
Placed around my daily life
By a watchful loving care.
Angels could not find for me
Richer gifts in spheres above,
Nor can queens receive on earth
Crown as great as mother's love.

Tell me not a substitute
For such love can ever be;
Spirits bright can never nurse
Babe or girl as tenderly.
As this darling mother value
O'er my life doth hourly cast,
Every other love may change
But mother's love will ever last.

TOLEDO, O., Jan. 10, 1887.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co—Gentlemen:—I have been in the general practice of medicine for most 40 years, and would say that in all my practice and experience, have never seen a preparation that I could prescribe with as much confidence of success as Ioan Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by you. Have prescribed it a great many times and its effect is wonderful, and would say in conclusion that I have yet to find a case of Catarrh that it would not cure, if they would take it according to directions.

Yours Truly,

HOLLOWAY HASH.

The following further information regarding the Guiwits—Earl wedding of the 17th inst, has been tendered us. On the evening in question, after the ceremony had been performed by the Rev. Belding, and the guests had departed, Mac. entered the store of H. H. Osgood and invited the crowd present to come over to his place and partake of ice cream and oranges in honor of the occasion; only one of the number, however, accepted, for as they afterward explained, they had not earned it; Mac. returned to his family and everything was running again in the usual order; at midnight the streets were deserted, the lights in the several houses had been extinguished and the occupants (of the houses not the lights) had sought their repose, and the moon shone placidly down on a quiet berg. Everything had an air of security; but what meant these figures lurking in the shadows of the machine shop, and also the blacksmith shop? Soon they begin to move carrying with them a goodly portion of the property of said shops. They proceeded to the front of Mac's residence and there arranged the booty in disorder on the sidewalk and other convenient places; suddenly the noise as of a cannon, the beating of drums and the rattle of musketry breaks on the night air and aroused the "sleepers" from their peaceful slumbers. Does this mean war? No! it is simply a little serenade on the part of the boys for the happy couple who had joined "heart and hand" for better or worse. Now the scene changes and another actor in this drama appears that threatens to turn it to a tragedy; this is no other than the owner of the house, who appears in dishabille grasping a "seven-shooter." Does the crowd scatter at this sight? The rattle of stones as they fell like hail around the unfortunate man, as he fired in the air to frighten them away, would indicate that they were made of tough material and not to be scared in that way.

Persons entering Holloway during the day, at a time when business is a little off, are assailed with a peculiar sound arising from the interior of the postoffice. Investigation proves to the eye what the ear has been unable to distinguish, i. e. the form of our P. O. clerk seated on the counter, trying to extract the glorious sounds which are concealed within the violin he is sawing on. He is persistent, and unless the wrath of Holloway ariseth and smiteth him, we predict a wide spread popularity in the musical circles of Holloway some time in the future.

Chas. Macham of Mt. Pleasant, spent a few days with his brother and friends at this place. Charlie has a position as station agent and operator at Mt. Pleasant and has the good will of all his old associates. He is a graduate of the C. T. line.

Mrs. M. A. Britton and Miss Flora Ross of North Morenci, were the guests of Mrs. Fred Kopke over Sunday. They came down to attend the birthday reception and family reunion at Allen Kelley's, it being Uncle Libni Kelley's 90th anniversary of his birth.

Some of our young men have sworn off on attending any more dancing parties, and on Thursday, last as there was to be a dance at M. M. Florence's, they concluded to run an opposition at Wm. Fowler's, in the shape of a sugar social. One young man got his best girl and started for the sugar social but his girl persuaded him to direct his course to a religious meeting that was held in the neighborhood. We are glad to see the young ladies steer the gentlemen in the way they should go.

The ladies of the Congregational church are preparing a program for an entertainment to be given some time this month. Judging from the success of the ladies' former efforts we can safely say that it will be well worth your patronage.

"Seven little boys from school" were pretty badly frightened last Thursday when the constable marched them up to Justice Brown's office, to answer to the charge of breaking windows in the cider mill. The little fellows pled guilty and were dismissed without further action, on suspended sentence.

A family re-union was held at the residence of B. O. Randall, Jan. 27th. There were present the families of L. K. Davis and D. H. Davis, also, Mr. and Mrs. Will Davis of Michigan City, and Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Ellis of Saginaw, making twenty-one in all. A merry time was had by all as this is the first time that the brothers and sisters have all been together in over a quarter of a century.

Rev. T. J. Joslin of Adrian, will preach in the M. E. church at the union service Sunday evening.

Mr. Ansel Kishpaugh, and Miss. Lizzie McAdam were married at Hillsdale, Wednesday Jan 30th, by Rev. Father Slane. Mr. and Mrs. Kishpaugh left Hillsdale immediately after the ceremony for Chicago.

It has long been the ambition of the Clinton amateurs to obtain "Hazel Kirke," but they could not do so without involving a greater expense than they could, hence when a few weeks ago Miss Stella Miller offered them the use of her manuscript and her assistance for a small consideration it seemed too good an opportunity to be neglected. And so indeed it proved, as the play was presented Tuesday and Wednesday evenings to crowded houses in a manner evidently satisfactory to all. The parts were all well sustained. C. D. Keyes as Dunstan Kirke surpassed himself. Mrs. Chas. Clark could have had no part so well adapted to her ability, as Dolly Dutton. Chas. Ward as Barney "paralyzed" the audience. But why particularize when each did so well. The young people have great cause to congratulate themselves on obtaining so competent an instructress as Miss Miller, and also that it was a financial success as well as a dramatic one.

NORTH EAST FRANKLIN.

Mrs. Elmer Wilson was somewhat better at last accounts.

Col. Deming is nursing a stiff neck, caused by a fall several weeks ago.

A small party of young people enjoyed a social evening at Geo. DePuy's Friday.

Wm. Wisner's health is quite poor.

The lovers of Terpsichore expect to devote Wednesday evening to her worship at G. W. Allen's.

Ella and Herbert Munger were agreeably surprised on Saturday when a baker's dozen of their young friends burst in upon them. Each carried a mysterious bundle which materialized later in a nice supper, crowning a happy afternoon.

We were all much interested in the well written account of the cap and box social at Britton. Our sympathies go to "Charlie," who will doubtless do his smiling after supper henceforth. We hope he found something good in the cupboard when he got home. There was no such mishap Friday evening at W. B. Keyser's. Not all the gentlemen could be provided with caps, but the boxes were heaped up, pressed down and running over, so there was an ample supply to donate from. Everybody had a good time. Visitors were present from other clubs also from Clinton. There seems to be no objection among the members of this club to a "third term" since Jerome Bowen was re elected President with no opposition except himself.

The second quarterly meeting will be held Sunday, Feb. 3d. at 10:30, in the M. E. church. Love-feast at 9:30.

MACON GRANGE.

The fourth and last entertainment given by Class No 3 came off Jan. 19. The program was good and well carried out, which together with the apple pie and cheese passed around at the proper time made it easy for the jury to decide in their favor. We say all right, they certainly deserved it, even without the refreshments.

The dinner prepared for them was given Saturday, the 26, at which time the following persons were installed for the ensuing year:

Master—J. W. Osborn.
Overseer—Wm. R. Wilson.
Lecturer—M. J. Martin.

The next meeting will be held Saturday evening, Feb. 2d. All turn out.

Better Than Ever.

It did seem as though the seedsmen outdid themselves last year in the line of elaborate catalogues, but here comes Vick's Floral Guide for 1889, from Rochester, N. Y., better than all previous issues. "Better" hardly expresses it—rather, we should say, far superior. It has been changed in every respect; new cuts, new type, is larger (opening like an old fashion singing-book); contains three elegant lithographs (8x10½ inches) of Roses, Geraniums and Melon and Tomato; besides a very fine plate of James Vick and his three sons who now own and manage this large business. These features must make the Floral Guide valuable to their many thousands of customers in this country.

We also notice that Vick turns to the plan started by the founder of the business years ago, of offering cash prizes at the State Fairs. One would think they were a little out of their heads to offer to the public such a work as the Guide free, for that is what it amounts to, when they say it will be sent on receipt of fifteen cents, and that a certificate good for fifteen cents worth of seeds will be returned with the Guide.

THE WHITE RIBBON.

Among the wonderful developments of organized power that have come into prominence during the past two decades, none is more remarkable than that unique organization, the Women's Christian Temperance Union No more shining evidence can be found of the laten political power which lies dormant in the hearts and brains of the women of our land, than this great uprising to face the sternest problems and encounter the deadliest foes of the human race. From the feeble efforts of a few weak women, goaded into action by these bitter experiences which only women can know, has come a mighty organization spreading its arms of power over every State and territory of our land, and sending the electric currents of sympathy, of inspiration, and of conscience awakening into hundreds of thousands of hearts and homes. It may well put to shame the boastful pride of men to reflect that while politcal parties have scarcely dared to lift the faintest voice in condemnation of the liquor traffic, while legislature and party conventions have vied with each other in seeking to perpetuate it and its service, while even religious denominations have wavered and grown weak in utterance, still this faithful band of women has had the courage to plant itself firmly upon the bed rock of principle, and maintain its position in the face of the combined opposition of party, press, and society. With that instinctive perception of the coming ideal in overleaping the barriers raised by conservatism and practicality and reaching at a single bound conclusions which would require long and weary effort to attain through the slow processes of masculine logic, they have been the first to catch the spirit of this great reform movement of the age, and standing upon the hill top of faith have called those beneath to come up to a higher plane of citizenship. To the keen eyed faith, the boundless courage, the sturdy loyalty to conviction which have characterized the leaders of this movement, too great praise cannot be given.

Many of them have won for themselves a place in the hearts of the people, higher than has yet been accorded to any of their sex. And grand as the work has been hitherto, still greater things remain to be accomplished in the future. The white ribbon army knows no defeat, and its campaigns never end and are always beginning. In church and school, on the platform and in legislative halls, the W. C. T. U. is ever pressing this question to the front, and when others relax their efforts, or grow weary and discouraged still these faithful workers may be found at their posts.

In after years, when the history of the present great temperance movement shall be written, the highest place in the pioneer ranks will be held by unquestioned merit. And when the final object for which we are all working so all have been attained, it will be found that in the heroism and self-sacrifice of women in this cause, a new crown will have been placed upon her brow, and she will have risen to a grander and nobler place in the world's work and life. —Exchange.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

Grand Rapids people take and read thirty-eight newspapers that are printed in that city, one of which is a Swedish sheet.

James Bryant and his better half, Big Rapids people, owned and operated a barber shop together in that city. Finally Mrs. B. became dissatisfied with her partner and offered him $125 for his interest in the concern if he'd make himself scarce in that region. He took the money and traveled.

An Essexville blacksmith had such a rush of work recently that he drove home shoe mains steadily for thirty-six hours without once stopping to listen to the stories that originate in such places.

A novel wedding occurred at Hersey the the other day. David Wiegel and Miss Jennie Williams, an Osceola couple, drove over to that village, and calling Rev. W. J. Douglass out to their conveyance, stood up in the vehicle, when the parson duly made them man wife. May they live long and prosper.

The straits of Mackinac are usually frozen over solidly long before the holidays, but this winter the middle of January finds 'em strained circumstances so far as ice is concerned. In fact, there isn't enough of it to cool a candy pull.

Senator Gilmore, of Blissfield, ought to make a valuable member of the legislature, as he's tried his hand at several kinds of business and made a "go" of 'em, too. The practical, level-headed business man is usually a pretty good individual wherever you may put him.

There's a well at Clinton that furnishes water in summer that'll make your teeth chatter to drink it, but in winter is about the temperature of dishwater, and the local wiseacres are unable to explain the phenomenon.

When the mercury touched 20 degrees below zero one morning last week Hancock people knew that the latitude of their location hadn't changed and were real happy again.

If you're going to tell a story, tell a good one, was the motto of a Chadwick man who avers he dropped 203 out of 204 woodchucks the past summer at the first fire. But then the man is 78 years old and has doubtless had lots of experience—in the story telling line.

A Rainsville man stumbled upon a happy family of ten skunks and captured the whole outfit. But he won't need to purchase any perfumery for at least a year to come.

The basement of a new church was recently dedicated at Cadillac. That's where the church folks occasionally sit down to chew.

Some eight years ago William Fairbrother and wife, of Middleville, emigrated to Dakota, both of whom have since died, leaving a family of four small children, the eldest being 13 years and the youngest 4 years of age. The orphans recently made the trip back to Middleville alone.

One of St. Clair county's wealthiest farmers can neither read nor write, and when he wants to execute a note has to hire a small boy for the job.

A Greenbush man is the owner of a lemon tree that bears nice juicy fruit that makes a fellow squeal to eat. Some specimens of the last crop measuring nearly a foot around.

The old story of climbing a tree for something to see, was what ailed James Mahler, an upper peninsula man. He too, sat in a tree, and what he saw was a pack of hungry wolves on the ground, anxious to try their teeth on his anatomy. Mahler was driving a team through a piece of lonely woods when the varmints made his acquaintance, but the team skipped for camp while their driver was climbing the tree, apprising the men of his mishap, when they started out and found him, greatly to his relief.

Complaints come from all parts of the state that physicians neglect to report the contagious diseases that come under their notice, while the parsons seem to forget about reporting many of the marriages they perform.

A Muskegon county man was entrusted with $300 by a dying woman and then tried to keep it. He now boardeth at the bastile.

A Kenockee landlord got into a racket with a tough guest, and now wears but one ear, the t. g. taking 'tother one for a chew.

The law class of Michigan university is larger than ever before, numbering 394. What has a civilized community done that such a class should be turned loose upon it.

The position of food inspector at Jackson must be a desirable one, at least the twenty-six applicants for the job seem to think so.

T. S. Robinson, the Livingston county chap convicted of a criminal assault upon his own daughter, has gone into retirement for a quarter of a century. Whed he again gets outside the prison walls he may be old enough to know better.

Lansing people must be living in clover. As though a real live legislature was not enough, two revivals are in full blast at the capital city.

Kent county's credit is so gold that her $150,000 court house bonds brought a premium of nearly $5,000.

A couple of Lapeer boys, 12 years of age and sons of respectable people, have got themselves into the bastile by obtaining goods on forged orders. Rather tender years for such escapades.

A Bellevue man thought his nag a trifle spryer than a Grand Trunk engine, but missed his calculation and now nurses a badly bruised body. He's about concluded that if he gets out of this scrape O. K., he'll not again dispute the right-of-way with a railway locomotive. Sensible conclusion.

Detroit regards herself as the natural and proper site for the permanent location of the state fair, and the other large towns of the state don't seem inclined to seriously dispute her claim.

A Mayfield lad of 13 summers has swapped off a portion of one hand for a bit of experience. A combination of curiosity and a dynamite cartridge was what did the business.

Since the new marriage license went into effect the county clerks of this state are unanimously of the opinion that two years is altogether too brief a term of service, and a movement looking toward an extension of the time is already under way. Evidently, there's millions in it.

Marquette is rejoicing because Armour & Co., the Chicago packers, are going to build a huge refrigerator in that city. Marquetters will soon be able to have bacon for breakfast—if they pay for it.

A movement is on foot looking toward the enactment of a law by the present legislature that shall impose a $1,000 tax upon every circus that visits the state. Should the proposed scheme materialize and result in keeping the festive clown out of the state what, oh, what will the dear people do for amusement in the years to come.

Michigan Legislature.

LANSING, Mich., Jan. 25.—The senate received a tax statistic report yesterday on the bill to increase the governor's salary. Notices were given of bills to repeal the standard time law, to promote the manufacture and sale of liquors in certain counties, to fix telephone rates, to revise the liquor law, to regulate the formation of corporations engaging in commerce and navigation. The house talked over the bill providing that school text books shall be published under the authority of the state, and furnished to pupils at cost, and that they shall not be changed oftener than once in five years.

LANSING, Mich., Jan. 26.—The senate yesterday adopted a resolution requiring the sergeant-at-arms to prevent the committee rooms being used for sleeping purposes. This was done because of scandalous stories with reference to the use these rooms were put to. Notice was given in the house of a resolution to submit a prohibitory constitutional amendment. A bill to prohibit shooting for ten years on Bois Blanc island, so as to let the deer increase, was introduced. The representatives hall will be used during February to hold an Irish Land league meeting, at which Governor Luce will preside.

LANSING, Mich., Jan. 28.—The house held a brief session Saturday morning and adjourned until Monday at 2 p. m. A few bills of minor importance were introduced. The concurrent resolution ending the custom of having beds in the committee rooms for the use of employes went through with a whiz. Nearly $50,000 special taxes from insurance companies doing business in Michigan had been paid into the treasury at the close of business Saturday. It will be increased by nearly $80,000 more when all remittances are in. The receipts last year were in excess of $188,000.

DOUBLE FUNERAL AT ESCANABA.

Michigan's Late Lieutenant Governor and W. F. Cochrane Buried.

ESCANABA, Mich., Jan. 24.—The funeral of Lieutenant Governor MacDonald yesterday was the largest gathering of the kind ever seen in this city. The whole city was heavily draped in mourning, and business of all kinds was suspended. The body of W. F. Cochrane was brought to the MacDonald residence and lay in state by the side of the dead lieutenant governor until noon when both bodies were buried together. Mrs. MacDonald and her daughter were utterly prostrated and could not appear at the funeral.

An Important Michigan Bill.

LANSING, Mich., Jan 26.—Senator Milnes gave notice in the senate Friday of a bill that will divert many thousand dollars from the treasury of the Lake Shore & Southern railroad. In 1846 the Michigan Southern company paid $500,000 for a thirty years' charter. The state was poor then and jumped at the chance, although the charter provided that the company should only pay as taxation ½ of 1 per cent. of its capital stock. This is merely a nominal sum, and for years the company has been practically exempt from taxation. Milnes' bill provides that the road shall pay as taxation 2 per cent. on its gross earnings when they do not exceed $4,000 per mile of road operated, and 3 per cent. when they exceed that sum.

Bishop Foley Defied.

DETROIT, Mich., Jan. 26.—A great stir was made in Catholic circles Saturday by a pronunciamento issued by Bishop Foley against Father Kolasinski, the priest who is giving communion after having been deposed by the bishop. The bishop warns all Catholics that they will excommunicate themselves by participating with Kolasinski in any religious rite whatever. The priest boasts that he has 8,000 souls who recognize him only as the spiritual head, and that when he gets his mammoth new church built, a site for which has been purchased, he will bring within his independent parish nearly all of the Detroit Poles.

An Epidemic of Small-Pox.

DETROIT, Mich., Jan. 23.—A special from Azalia, Mich., says: Small-pox in this village has developed from a so-called "scare" into that much-to-be-dreaded reality—an epidemic. There are now fourteen cases under treatment. Everything possible is being done to prevent its spread, the town being well-guarded and no one allowed to leave except one or two whose business it is to provide necessities. Azalia is but eighteen miles from Ann Arbor, and its 200 inhabitants are largely composed of railroad employes, lumbermen and charcoal burners.

Liabilities of $1,000,000.

BATTLE CREEK, Mich., Jan. 25.—The J. J. Burns Construction company, which assigned a few days ago, is found to have liabilities of a clear $1,000,000, while its assets are a capital stock of $100,000 and bonds of the new Battle Creek & Bay City railroad and Battle Creek & Goshen railroad, with a face value of $1,500,000. The creditors are looking up the matter now, and find that the assignment has a suspicious look. It was made to a young lawyer, who is a director of the company, and who had only $100 worth of stock in the concern.

The Jackson, Mich., Murder.

JACKSON, Mich., Jan. 28.—R. Irving Latimer was arrested Saturday afternoon on a warrant sworn out before Justice Palmer for the murder of his mother, Mrs. Mary H. Latimer. The arrest is understood to be on admission made by himself of being in this city when he had heretofore claimed he was in Detroit the night of the murder.

MISS PHOEBE COUZINS.

She Publishes an Address to the Odd Fellows of Missouri.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 26.—Miss Phoebe Couzins, who succeeded the late Maj. Couzins (her father) as United States marshal of the western district of Missouri, has published an address to the Odd Fellows of Missouri, calling upon them to remove the stigma from their order arising from the refusal of the Odd Fellows' Mutual Aid society to reinstate her father as a member, or to pay his insurance of $1,000 after death. Maj. Couzins had been an Odd Fellow forty years and was one of the founders of the order. During his last illness an officer of the society and a friend of the family offered to pay his dues to the society, but neglected to do so. Consequently Maj. Couzins was suspended and the society refused to reinstate him.

PHOEBE COUZINS.

Monkeyed with an "Unloaded" Gun.

BALTIMORE, Md., Jan. 26.—Hon. Peter J. Campbell, a brilliant lawyer and politician of this city, speaker pro tem. of the last house of delegates, and leader of the Democrats on the floor, accidentally shot and fatally wounded Edward Gordon Friday night. Gordon was employed as barkeeper in a saloon frequented by lawyers, which is located in the rear of the Journalists' club in Monument square. While Mr. Campbell and a few friends were in the place Gordon exhibited four pistols which were lying in a drawer, stating that none of them was loaded. Mr. Campbell picked up one of them and began snapping it. The subsequent result shows that there was one chamber loaded, and when the cylinder revolved to the proper place the cartridge exploded and the bullet pierced Gordon's side just below the heart. The surgeons pronounce his injury fatal.

Moore Didn't Levant.

Indiana's Prize Defaulter Was Simply in Retirement

AWAITING WHAT MIGHT TURN UP.

His Shortage Expected to Go Above Half a Million—A Lynx-Eyed Reporter Finds the Culprit and Gets the Story—A Sort of Rob Peter to Pay Paul Affair—Determined Not to Go to Join the Canada-American Colony—He Makes a Clean Breast of the Trouble.

HARTFORD, Conn., Jan. 24.—Col. Jacob Greene, president of the Connecticut Mutual Life insurance company of this city, has issued a circular informing the policy holders that Joseph A. Moore, for sixteen years financial correspondent of the company at Indianapolis, is a defaulter to the amount of about $500,000, but has restored property which may reduce the actual loss to $400,000, and that in any event the loss will not affect the solvency or impair the dividends of the company, which is very prosperous and will pay a larger dividend this year than last, while probably increasing its already large surplus.

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 26.—Joseph A. Moore, the Connecticut Mutual Life defaulter, has for several years been one of the most popular and influential business men in Indianapolis. He owns a fine residence in this city, but his special pride was Tanglewood farm, his country place. There he had a beautiful house and hundreds of head of fine cattle, scores of blooded horses, and thousands of dollars worth of barns and other improvements. His family has for many years been intimate with that of Gen. Harrison, and last summer it was arranged that the general should spend his nights at Tanglewood during the hot season. He went out there one night, but concluded that it was no cooler than his own house, and did not repeat the trip. Mr. Moore is a vestryman in St. Paul's Episcopal church, to which the Hendricks and other leading families belong.

Moore has not yet been arrested and no criminal proceedings have been begun against him. He is remaining in seclusion in the city and positively refuses to see anybody or say anything for publication about his troubles.

W. G. Abbott, vice president of the Connecticut Mutual Insurance company, is here with an expert accountant, and it is through their efforts that Moore's dishonesty was made public. It is thought his defalcation will be considerably in excess of $500,000. He was also agent for the German-American, Firemen's Fund, City of London, and Imperial of London insurance companies, and is supposed to be short in his accounts with them. Nothing definite is known about this, however.

LATER.—A reporter yesterday succeeded in obtaining an interview with Mr. Moore. He is at present closely confining himself to his residence in the city. He talked with considerable freedom, denying the rumors that depositors in his bank would suffer. He stated that he had turned over to the Connecticut Mutual property worth $200,000. When asked if he knew what course the officers of the insurance company would pursue, he said: "I have no idea of their plans. I am simply waiting for developments, and am entirely in their hands. It want it understood that I have remained here to face the consequences of my acts of my own accord. When I was informed that Mr. Abbott, the secretary of the company, was coming out here to investigate my affairs, I had plenty of time to leave the country and save myself completely. I decided to stay right here, and when Mr. Abbott arrived I told him the whole truth about the condition of my business. I did not conceal anything, however trivial, and then I said to him that I proposed to remain here. I told him that he could always find me if he wanted me, and promised him that I would not commit suicide either. So here I am, waiting for anything that may come."

Moore stated that his troubles dated back to 1880. "In 1879," said he, "a law was passed prohibiting foreign corporations from bringing suit in the federal court. That destroyed my business. For two or three years I did nothing at all and became very despondent. Just before that, a short time, I had gone into bankruptcy, and an intimate friend who had indorsed my paper was a heavy loser. I always considered that I was in honor bound to repay him, and it was in an attempt to do this that my present troubles really began. I had no business, and yet had heavy running expenses. At the same time I was striving to repay my friend the money he had lost by me. I had loaned great sums of money for the company I represented, taking real estate security. After the panic the borrowers were unable to pay off the mortgages and the property fell back into our hands. It had depreciated greatly in value and was greatly run down and in very bad repair. I felt myself more or less at fault in having placed the loans so badly, though in reality I had done the best that I could. I was extremely sensitive on this point. I saw the company losing thousands of dollars on investments that had been made on my judgment. All these things piled upon me, and as time passed on grew more and more burdensome. Many a time I felt as though I should lose my mind. I was beset on every side, and I felt bound to do something to relieve myself, and yet there was nothing I could do. At this point I went to New York, and began to speculate in stocks. I had fair success, too, and made some money; but whenever I came back here I lost my head and everything went wrong."

Indiana Legislature.

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 25.—The senate elections committee reported on the Ray-Carpenter case yesterday. Carpenter, Republican, was elected by 6 majority, but the testimony, the majority of the committee said, showed the bribery of several persons by Carpenter, besides a good deal of money given out for cards. The minority of the committee held that Carpenter was legally entitled to his seat. The debate occupied the whole day without adjournment. The house passed the bill establishing a labor bureau.

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 26.—In the senate yesterday Dressler Report called for the reading of the testimony in the Ray-Carpenter case, and said it did not show that Carpenter had paid a cent for anybody's votes. The testimony was read, and seemed to bear out Dressler's assertion. After a long and heated debate a resolution to unseat Carpenter was carried, but one to seat Ray was rejected. The governor will probably call a new election immediately, and the seat will not be vacant more than two weeks. The house did a large amount of business of little interest.

CHAPPED hands result from two causes. Too much alkali in the soap, which draws the natural oil from the skin, leaving it harsh, dry, and liable to crack, or the fats, from which the soap is made, are not properly combined with the alkali, so, from its greasy nature, it is impossible to rinse off the soap after washing. Prof. Leeds, Ph. D., Stevens Institution of Technology, says: "The IVORY SOAP, while strongly cleansing, leaves the skin soft and pleasant to the touch, instead of harsh, uncomfortabe, and liable to chap."

A WORD OF WARNING

There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

WHERE?

Where will this worn wanderer's
Last resting place be?
'Neath the palms of the desert
Where the fountains spread free?
Will it be in the desert,
Entombed by strange hands,
Or on the sea's coast,
In the moist, yielding sands?
No matter. God's heaven
Above me will spread;
His stars, as death's tapers,
Will light my low bed.

—Laura Garland Carr.

MY FIRST LOVE.

"What an old, worn out title!" I fancy I hear somebody saying, as he or she turns the leaf and reads the heading of my idyl. Old, I grant you, sir or madam, but worn out—never! Do you say, as you meet the hundredth face in a crowd, "What an old, worn out pattern!" No; for though the faces possess the same features, those features individually and their arrangement are ever varied, even to the millionth face. So it is with the story of "My First Love;" there are features in it which you will doubtless recognize as having formed part of your day dream, gentle reader, but as you turn the last leaf of the narrative I believe you will feel with me that none save this old, pure, sweet phrase has any right to head these lines.

I am an Englishman, brought up in all the traditions of an old Tory family by a dear mother—God rest her soul—of whom her friends used to say: "Ah! but she is of the old school." Very stiff and ceremonious, very punctilious and very polite, but every action fraught with an old world purity and courtesy that made one think of the pictures of Sir Godfrey and of the perfumes of dried lavender. Man, says Herbert Spencer, is formed by his environment, and my environment was my mother, a woman of the world, mark you, aux bouts des ongles. You must not imagine that I was brought up to man's estate in ignorance of the foul gases of the valley and marsh while breathing the pure air of the mountain top. The only effect visible of the tender influences which guarded my life till I was four-and-twenty was a certain reserve of manner and a more than ordinary "English" horror of anything approaching to "bad form." I tell you all this to show you once more how love laughs at prejudices and calmly ignores preconceived ideas.

My mother died with the tulips of 1886, and some of the fellows at the club persuaded me to come to America, and furthermore, with a view to a thorough distraction of my thoughts, prevailed upon me to give a series of readings in the States of my own and other verses. I have coquetted a little with the muse, and, as would be the case with most young poets—or rather rhymesters—the thought of presenting my work viva voce to the people of the United States caused a strange thrill of delight. I communicated, therefore, with Maj. Pond, and in the early autumn of 18— I sailed for the States, and commenced a tour which, I am happy to say, was not unsuccessful.

The following June found me in Denver, Colo., and I put up at the Grand Canon hotel for a week, during which time I gave a couple of readings and rested amid the gorgeous scenery of the state. The third day after my arrival I had come down as usual to take my matutinal coffee in the public dining room, and was hardly seated when a lady, whom candor compels me to describe as "an old lady," came into the room, accompanied by a young girl. They took their seats exactly opposite to me. A young girl, did I say? Nay, she was hardly more than a child—17 or 18, maybe—and her face traced itself upon my soul in a manner which is ineffaceable. It was a round face, with just that slight squareness of jaw which promised to give to it a wonderful strength of personality as years went on. Her coloring was perfect, faintly flushed with the dawn of womanhood, with white temples and throat, and a high, pale forehead, the whole framed in a careless torrent of hair like to liquid gold. A pair of great wandering, but withal fearless, blue eyes, a finely modeled nose, just the least bit tip tilted, and a mouth like those of the cherubs in Raphael's "Madonna" in the Sistine chapel. She was a little girl, and her figure was just taking unto itself the sweet sinuous curves of womanhood, which showed themselves as she moved to her seat with all the untaught, unconscious grace of perfect and healthy development. Our eyes met as she sat down. She looked at me with a full, frank gaze in which there was an undefined something of half recognition—she had evidently known some one who resembled me—and then, having satisfied herself of my non-identity, she turned her attention to the older lady and their respective breakfasts. A moment afterwards I rose and left the room.

During the next two or three days we met periodically, in the dining room, in the corridors, in the elevator or on the streets of Denver, and we always threw one another in passing that glance which, though apparently absolutely expressionless, seems to say: "If we knew one another we should be friends." Have you never seen people in the streets, in theatres, in ball rooms, concerning whom, as your eyes meet for a fractional part of a second, you have said this to yourself almost unconsciously? I have, and I always regret these unknown friends of mine, but I never felt it more strongly than I did with regard to this golden haired child whom I met way out in Denver, Colo.

The last morning of my stay in the city arrived, and I was sitting alone in my room up stairs, jotting down on a scrap of music paper the chords of an accompaniment to a little song that I had written for a friend in Baltimore. My task finished, I went down stairs to the parlor, where there was a piano, to try their effect, and, finding the room apparently empty, I seated myself on the music stool. As I opened the piano I heard a rustle, and turning round I saw my little unknown friend sitting in a low arm chair in the embrasure of a window, her great blue eyes fixed upon me in fearless curiosity. I rose instinctively and said:

"Shall I be disturbing you, mademoiselle, if I play over a few chords?"

"Oh, no," she said. "Please go on."

As I turned to the keyboard she added: "Will my presence disturb you? Shall I go away?"

"By no means," I hastened to reply; "on the contrary. Indeed, I shall take the liberty, if you will allow me, of asking your opinion on a little melody that I want to run over."

She looked out of the window for a moment, and then turning her eyes full upon me once more, she remarked:

"I came down here because I was so lonesome up stairs. Auntie has gone out on business, and some friends I expected to call and take me for a drive haven't arrived."

"Is it possible" was my rejoinder, and in ten minutes we were the greatest friends in the world. We sat in the drawing room of the Grand Canon hotel for nearly an hour, chatting gayly of America and England and of our hobbies and of ourselves. At the end of that time she rose and said:

"Well, it's a humiliating necessity, but I must eat to keep alive, and if you will excuse me, I'll go down to luncheon."

I rose also and answered: "You are quite right—if there were no prosy side to life, we should not appreciate the poetry of it"—and then, after a moment's hesitation, added: "I am a foreigner, and do not understand your rules of conduct, but would it be very casual of me to suggest that, as I also must live, and with that object in view must also lunch, we should lunch together, as you are alone?"

"Why, of course—why shouldn't we?" and then she added, a look of perplexed inquiry coming over her brows, "I don't know quite who is going to introduce us to one another, Mr. ——?"

"Neal," said I; "Ronal Neal, at the service of Mademoiselle ——?"

"Tressahar—Pauline Tressahar," said she. "Let me give you a card."

She fumbled for her card case and I for mine, and standing in the doorway of the hotel parlor we gravely exchanged cards and bowed formally to one another.

"I live in Nashville, Tenn.," she said, "and if you ever come there it will give papa—Col. Euclid Tressahar—very great pleasure if you will come and see us—you will come, won't you?"

I assured her that I would, and we went down to lunch. The head waiter gave me a menu and a check, and I ordered a tiny little meal with some care, during which operation she watched me with a nervous, perplexed look which I perfectly well understood, but which for the life of me I couldn't see any way of softening—unless I told the head waiter to give me two checks and filled up one for her and one for myself, which would have been foolish to my English ideas. As we finished our microscopic repast, however, she said in the most matter-of-fact tone to the waiter:

"The check, please."

The obsequious Italian brought it to me naturally and she looked up and said:

"And mine, too, waiter."

"They are both together, madame."

"Oh! but—no—I—want"—she began.

"Really," said I, feeling very uncomfortable, "it is such an absolute nothing that it would be simpler, and would give me a pleasure into the bargain, if you would allow me to sign this, Miss Tressahar."

"Certainly not," she replied, blushing, though her tone was quite decided; "will you hand it to me for a moment?"

I did so and she gravely calculated what her share of our lunch had been, and then producing her purse she counted out the exact amount in silver and handed it over to me with the check.

"Now," said she, "if you will sign it it will be all right."

I did so without a word, fascinated, but within feeling a little "mean," and then the child, laying a quarter down beside her plate for the waiter, said:

"Now, let's go back to the parlor for a few minutes and then I must go out."

We went up stairs again and sat for half an hour or so, talking of quite serious matters, and then we bade one another farewell, mutually expressing a hope that in truth it might be not "good-by," but "au revoir." She was leaving Denver in an hour's time; I also was leaving the same evening.

And thus we parted.

Up stairs in my room I had a somewhat battered copy of my last volume of poems. I put a pen through my name on the fly leaf and wrote thereon a little inscription in verse expressive of the pleasure I took in transferring to her the possession of the volume, and so I sent it down to her by a servant and betook myself to my packing. I was thus employed, talking the while to a friend who had dropped in to say "good-by," when a bell boy brought up a crimson rose upon a salver from the office.

"Miss Tressahar has just left, sir, and sends this, with her compliments; she has received the book and is much obliged, and says she will write to thank you from Nashville."

* * * * * * * *

I laid the rose reverently between the leaves of my Bible and put it into my valise. A week later I was on a ranch at Los Angeles, Cal., and the post brought me one day a letter of four pages in a pretty Italian handwriting—it was from Pauline.

She had received my book just before she left Denver and hoped I had received her rose. She had read my verses and was pleased to say that she liked them—that they touched her. Some of them, written in a cynical, despairing strain, she criticised and regretted. She hoped that some day I should meet some one who would make me think better of life and cure me of my love of solitude. She commended my body to happiness, and my soul to God, and remained ever, very sincerely my friend, Pauline Tressahar. P. S.—She hoped I would not forget my promise and come to Nashville.

Yesterday—only yesterday—a friend sent me a Nashville paper containing an article concerning myself; almost alongside of the criticism on my poems, in a column headed "Personal Intelligence," there appeared as an item of local interest the announcement of the engagement of "the beautiful daughter of our esteemed fellow citizen, Col. Euclid Tressahar," to the son of some equally esteemed inhabitant of Nashville, Tenn.

I cut out the article on myself and my poems, with the paragraph attached to its side and, folding it up small, opened my Bible to place it with Pauline's gift. The leaves of the book were perfumed by the sweet dry petals—the soul that still lived of her crimson rose. And on the page where it had lain there was a little crimson stain—I had pressed it upon the verse of St. Paul's Epistle to the brethren at Philippi: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, think on these things."—Edward Heron Allen in Philadelphia Times.

MICHIGAN CROP REPORT, JAN. 1, 1889.

The report this month shows the cost of producing the wheat, oats, corn and hay crops raised by crop correspondents in 1888, also the average cost of the wheat, oats and corn crops for the five years, 1884-88. The questions for this report are substantially the same as for the January reports of 1885, 1886, 1887 and 1888, and the results of the investigation are presented in the same form as in previous years.

Each crop is credited with its proportionate share of the rental value of the farm dwellings, because from the nature of the case, each must be charged with its proportionate share of the interest, taxes, repairs and insurance on the dwellings, at the same time that it is charged with the wages of laborers who are supposed to board themselves; and of course dwell in their own houses, or in houses the rent of which is paid out of their wages.

Returns have been received from 636 correspondents, representing 524 townships. Four hundred and thirty-three of these reports are from 334 townships in the southern four tiers of counties, and 112 reports are from 101 townships in the fifth and sixth tiers of counties.

The total area of improved land represented this year is 59,868 acres, of which 10,703 acres, or 18 acres in each 100, were in wheat; 7,165 acres, or 12 in each 100, were in oats; 6,418 acres, or nearly 11 acres in each 100 were in corn; 11,936 acres, or 20 acres in each 100, were in hay.

The following table shows the cost, as itemized for this report, of producing and marketing, at the usual place of market, one acre of wheat in the southern, central and northern counties respectively, and in the State in 1888:

	South 4 tiers of Co's.	5th & 6th tiers of Co's	North Co's.	State
Cost plowing	$1.59	$1 79	$1.98	$1.67
Of fitting	1.04	.94	.73	.99
Fer. purchased	.16	.08	.00	.14
Barnyard ma.	.31	.52	.31	.33
Seed	1.32	1.40	1.39	1.34
Drilling	.36	37	.39	.36
Harvesting	1.36	1.31	1.53	1.37
Stacking	.68	.62	.70	.67
Threshing	1 03	.89	.88	.99
Marketing	.69	.59	.88	.66
Int., 7 per cent	3.78	2 59	1.33	3.22
Insurance	.06	.10	.13	.07
Taxes	.33	.32	.18	.31
Repairs	.84	,83	1 09	.86
Total Cost	$13.55	12.35	11.53	12.98

Subtract from the above totals the value of straw per acre and the rental value of dwellings (see Table I.) and there remains as cost of producing and marketing the wheat grown upon one acre in the southern four tiers of counties $11:31, in the central counties $9.55, in the northern counties $8 30, and $10 54 as the average for the State Dividing these amounts respectively by the average yield per acre, the cost of producing and marketing one bushel of wheat in the southern four tiers of counties is found to be 66 cents, in the central counties 64 and 7-tenths cents, in the northern counties 56 and 9-tenths cents, and the average cost in the State 64 cents

The average price of wheat January 1, 1889, was, in the southern four tiers of counties, 97 cents per bushel, in the central counties 97 cents per bushel, and in the northern counties 96 cents per bushel. The crop of 1888 sold at these prices would bring correspondents in the southern section of the State $5.32 per acre, in the central counties $4 76 per acre, and in the northern counties $5.71 por acre more than the expenditures for fertilizers of all kinds, seeds, insurance, taxes and repairs, seven per cent interest on the value of the land on which the crop was raised, and day wages for labor.

The number of wheat fields reported is 870, of which 43 per cent were upon oat stubble, 16 per cent upon wheat stubble, 14 per cent upon summer fallow, 15 per cent upon clover and timothy sod, and 12 per cent upon corn ground.

Reports have been received of the quantity of wheat marketed by farmers during the month of December at 514 elevators and mills. Of these 417 are in the southern four tiers of counties, which is 66 per cent. and 68 are in the fifth and sixth tiers of counties, which is 57 per cent of the whole number in these sections respectively. The total number of bushels reported marketed is 614 793, of which 128,587 bushels were marketed in the first or southern tier of counties; 159,848 bush. in the second tier; 135.423 bushels in the third tier; 140 222 bushels in the fourth tier; 43.628 bushels in the fifth and sixth tiers; and 6,885 bushels in the northern counties. At 73 elevators and mills, or 14 per cent of the whole number from which reports have been received, there was no wheat marketed during the month.

The total number of bushels of wheat marketed in August, September, October, November and December is 9,935,738, or about 42 per cent of the crop of 1888. The number of bushels reported marketed in the same months of 1887 was 5,591,069, or 25 per cent of the crop of 1887. In 1887 reports were received from about 47 per cent, and in 1888 from about 95 per cent of the elevators and mills in the southern four tiers of counties.

Reports for December, 1888, were received from 182 more elevators and mills than for the same month in 1887.

The amount of wheat of the crop of 1888 marketed but not yet reported to this office, and amount yet held by farmers in excess of their own requirements, is about six million bushels.

For the relief and cure of the inflammation and congestion called "a cold in the head" there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other modes of treatment have proved of no avail.

THE TEACHERS OF LENAWEE.

The First Quarterly meeting of the County Association for the Present Year.

The Teachers Association of Lenawee Co, met at Adrian on Saturday, Jan. 19th and was called to order at 10 A. M. by President Hayden. After singing "Michigan my Michigan" a paper was read by Prof. Maybe of Blissfield entitled "Elementary Literature." A taste for this literature can be cultivated early—from nine to fifteen, and should be taken up early because so few comparatively ever reach the high school. Supt. E. A. Wilson thought the paper ought to be indorsed and stated the plan as pursued in the Tecumseh Schools; he thought a similar plan could be followed in the country schools. Introduce what you can under the head of language lessons by having a set of books from district library or a book from any source, read by teacher aloud or by pupil, followed by reproduction exercises. In the high school we take it up under the head of General English—each pupil writing two essays per term or a review of some book read outside of the class. The discussion was continued by Prof. Robbins, Supt. Walker and others.

Mr. Pattengill of the Mich. School Moderator criticized the method of teaching the subjects—Reading and Language—in the Detroit schools; he also advised the plan of the "Young Folks Reading Circle" to be adopted. At the appearance of State Supt. Estabrook—a storm of applause burst forth, after which—a recitation entitled—"How Ruby Played" by Prof. Carrier was well received.

In the afternoon the association was opened by a song from the Ogden Glee Club entitled—"King of the land and sea". The person appointed to read a paper on "Tenure of office" failing to put in appearance—Supt. E A. Wilson was called upon to open the discussion. Teaching should be made more of a profession—not a stepping stone to other work.

Some allusions were made to the workings of Civil Service. The Township as a unit was considered as an advance in the direction of longer time of office. Mr. Pattengill followed with one of his characteristic speeches dwelling particularly upon the township as a unit to further the interests of teachers; he also believed that the profession should be elevted. Prof. Robbins and others followed. State Supt. Estabrook made a few general remarks but devoted most of his time to answering questions; his answers were full of life and everything was made exceedingly plain. The following is a list of the questions.

Explain the township as a unit for the scool district. Analyze—To be or not to be, that is the question.

What would you do if a pupil had four or five imperfect lessons and one or too perfect ones?

How would you remedy tardiness?

What is the average wage of district school teachers also graded school teachers? Under township system, who hires teachers?

Diagram—They tell us about the world's wonders.

To what extent should orthography be taught in our schools?

Parse prisoner in following—The man died a prisoner—Parse running. The boy came running.—Analyze following.

I went up to where it lay. He is too weak to be shaking hands with, A girl constantly whispers? what shall I do with her? Ans.—Do something.

Shall a boy who does not like History be excused from it?

Would it not be better to have a uniform system of books in a district? why? Why do they pay men more than women holding the same grade of certificate?

Does the teacher have any jurisdiction over the pupil after he leaves the school grounds? Ans.—Yes, till he reaches his home. What is the best method of teaching Physiology?

The Ogden Glee club then favored the association with a song—"Come where the Lillies Bloom"

Next followed a paper on "School Government by Prof. Fowler.—Then a recitation by Prof. Carrier, and the association adjourned till some time in May.

Dairy Column.

Edited by the Bureau of Dairy Information CHICAGO, ILL.

For the encouragement of improved methods of Dairying. Information upon all matters relating to the manufacture of butter and cheese and handling of milk will be given in answer to questions mailed to the Bureau at above address.

CREAMERY VS. DAIRY.

FOR BUREAU OF DAIRY INFORMATION. BY J. H. MONRAD, WINNETKA, ILL.

I sometimes meet farmers who doubt the benefit of creameries and cheese factories, and who look upon them as only one middleman more to rob them of their just dues, and I don't blame them: it is quite a natural human feeling to believe you can do better under any other circumstance than the one existing. Yet, in nine cases out of ten, they would return to the creamery if tried to do without it for a while. But when a shining light in one of our dairy conventions, after advocating private dairying, throws out hints about the danger of creameries developing into monopolies, I think it time to protest. The above mentioned speaker also used the old stock argument expressed by a city man, who in my hearing said to a farmer: "Why don't you farmers make some butter and cheese in your spare time?" Yes, it is just this idea that butter and cheese can be made in the "spare" time of the farmer's wife, (already overworked.) which place on the market the millions of pounds of ten cent butter.

I am sick of hearing this argument, as if the time of our wifes and daughters is worth nothing. Shall we forget that the work of a farmer's wife (with an unamerican number of children) is never done, and "when it is done, she sits down to mend socks," and shall we be mean enough not to value her work?

No, emphatically, no. If a farmer is making a calculation which pays him best to sell his milk or cream, or to have it made up on the farm, he should allow the maker, be she his wife, his daughter, or a hired helper, a just price for her work, and then see how much per pound it costs him to have it so made, just as well as he must estimate his own loss of time in marketing the butter. If he does this, I shall willingly allow that their are cases where it may pay him, even if he has only four or five cows, but these exceptions will only prove that, as a rule, it will not pay him, especiaely if he has to pool his butter at the country store, from where it is shipped to a commission man, and by him sold to a repacker. I believe that it will only pay where he has been able to sell direct to customers, and then he will find that there are troublesome customers and bad debts to be considered.

If he has twenty or twenty-five cows, and his family the time, the will, and the ability, it may pay him better, but with the increase of production, the difficulty in selling all at retail is also increased, while the quantity is yet too small to be sure of creamery prices in the open market, where uniformity plays such an important role. If he has forty cows or upwards, and other conditions favorable, I believe that he, as a rule, can do better by making his own butter, as he can afford to pay a good maker, be it his wife, his daughter, or a hired one, and if he has sense to give an honest commissionman the chance to work up a trade for his butter, by not changing around every other week, because—forsooth—he don't always get the highest price, and because he, in that case, is inclined to blame the commissionman instead of looking for the fault in the dairy. But even such a farmer may often find it to his advantage to sell his cream. As to selling the milk, I am not in favor of that, unless the skim milk is returned, but I find that farmers generally value the skim milk too low, and are not inclined to consider the manure value of feeding it on the farm at all.

I think the creameries may be reduced in size with advantage, in spite of the increased cost of manufacture, if we ever get so far that the farmer's grown up daughters will take up the work, (i.e., what I shall call, a small farm creamery) making up the cream of the nearest neighbor. The "uniformity" of such butter could be obtained by the girls graduating at dairy schools, which are bound to come in every state, and which, I am happy to hear, Mr. F. D. Curtis is working hard to have started in New York.

To cut short this article I may quote the Dairy World proverbs: "the baby or the butter?" that is the question. If the baby is to be No. 1, "sell your cream;" and "time and tide waits for no man." When the cream is ripe it ought to churned, let the baby cry, let the bread burn, and the "man" wait for his meal, if you won't do this, "sell your cream."

As I said before, there are cases where private dairying is the best, and these cases will increase, but to the great mass of farmers I say don't lose confidence in a system to which—with all its faults—the American dairy interest owes its present greatness, a system which is being imitated in Europe with great success.

THE PROPOSED LIBEL LAW.

A bill relative to actions for libel:

Sec. 1. The People of the State of Michigan Enact: That in actions for libel there shall be no presumption of either express, actual, or legal malice from the mere fact of the publication of the libel, and the burden of proof of the question of malice shall be on the plaintiff.

Sec. 2. In actions for libel, if there is no proof of express malice, or the court or jury shall find that there was no such malice, then no exemplary or punitive damages shall be awarded; nor shall any general damages be awarded that are not strictly actual and real.

Sec. 3. No action for libel shall be brought or maintained unless the plaintiff shall, before bringing suit, request the defendant to publish a retraction of the libel, and allow to the defendant a reasonable time in which to publish such retraction and to make such amends as are reasonable and possible under the circumstances of the case, and proof of the publication of any such retraction or correction shall be admissible in evidence under the general issue on the question of the good faith of the defendant, and in mitigation and reduction of damages. Proof of the failure or neglect of the plaintiff to comply with the provisions of this section may be given in evidence under the general issue in bar of the action.

Sec. 4. It shall not be lawful for any attorney at law to bring or conduct any action of libel for a contingent fee, or on any understanding, express or implied, that he is to receive any portion, or all of the damages recovered, as compensation for his services; nor shall any attorney at law advance any money or incur any liability for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the plaintiff in any such action.

Sec. 4. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The above draft of a libel law has been recommended by the State Press Association and it is to be hoped that our Solons at Lansing will see their way clear to passing it. Our present libel laws are a burlesque on justice and so crudely drawn that they have been declared unconstitutional by the State Supreme Court. They are sadly in need of revision.

TECUMSEH, MICH., JAN. 31, 1889

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

J. F. Hicks has gone East on a business trip.

Ladies! do not forget that Mrs. Freeman wants her pay this week.

The annual meeting of the Tecumseh & Macon Telegraph Co. will be held Monday, Feb. 11.

Vaccination has been the principal industry among the rising generation for the past two weeks, but the season is about over now.

Justice Burridge has purchased the desk used by the late Judge Stacy, which he has placed in his private office. It is a fine addition to his office furniture.

E. L. Hough, of Ypsilanti, was in town over Sunday. He is managing a jewelry and stationery store in that city. He seems to be happy, and we infer that he must be prospering.

The thaw last week interfered with business at Woodard's toboggan slide but this week has been fine weather for that amusement, and lovers of the sport have availed themselves of it.

Our dairy bureau supplies its readers with many very valuable articles and it would be wise to cut the dairy column out and paste it in a scrap book. In a short time a valuable reference book would be obtained.

The report of the Michigan Forestry Commission is at hand. It is the first official report on that subject issued in this state and is a very valuable compilation. Hon. Geo. B. Horton of this county is one of the members of the Commission.

They say that the White Caps are operating in this vicinity, as some men have received threatening letters. We very much doubt the existence of any such unlawful combination here. Some wag has probably "put up a job" on the men who got the letters.

The Ionia Sentinel of Jan. 3d is a "reunion edition," and contains a lengthy report 20 columns long of the reunion of the 6th Mich. Cavalry held in that city. Several vets were present from Hudson and Addison in this county. Gen. R. A. Alger was the hero of the occasion.

The farmers' institute held at Adrian last week proved to be a very successful gathering not only in attendance but in the interest manifested by all present. Many very instructive papers were read and the discussions were quite spicy. We shall endeavor to procure some of the papers for publication.

J. H. Mills advertised for a lost dress in last week's HERALD. The paper went into the postoffice about 3 o'clock p.m. At 5 o'clock a clerk in Anderson's store read the notice, who had the dress, and when he went to supper at 6 he took the article to Mr. Mills. Pretty quick work.

In another column we print the advertisement of that sterling and reliable paper, the New York Mail and Express, and we wish to commend it to our readers as in the broadest sense a national newspaper, most carefully edited, and adapted to the wants and tastes of intelligent readers throughout the entire community—north, south, east and west. It is a thoroughly clean paper, free from corrupting, sensational and demoralizing trash, miscalled news, which defiles the pages of too many city papers.

One of the most delightful of Susan Coolidge's stories, "Who ate the Queen's Luncheon?" opens the February Wide Awake with a beautiful frontispiece by Garrett. Another short story as singularly humorous, a valentine story is entitled "The Apple of Discord," and will entertain all the grammar-school boys and girls; it is by Georgiana Washington. "Princess May-blossom" by Annette Lyster, with its eight pictures, is a dainty fairy story. "Children in Italian Sculpture" by Mabel F. Robinson, is a model art-paper for young people, with interesting pictures.

The February Magazine of American History again anticipates the popular desire and comes in honor of Washington's birthday as a "Washington number." Those who are searching for data concerning Washington's presidential career in New York city will warmly welcome Mrs. Lamb's leading article, "Washington as President, 1789-1790," a companion piece to her famous "Inauguration of Washington in 1789," published in December. These two able articles represent authoritatively from all sides the position in which Washington stood at the beginning of our government, and give in popular and pleasing style the exact information the public wishes to obtain. The illustrations of the current number act as side lights of immense value. The frontispiece represents in a group, Washington, his wife, and her two grandchildren, at the age and as they appeared in 1789. It is a unique and valuable number. Subscription price, $5.00 a year, 743 Broadway, N. Y.

The Hatch will case was called in the Circuit Court Tuesday morning, but did not come to trial, as the parties at the last moment agreed to submit the matter to arbritation.

Rev. Fr. Leavy, of Monroe, died yesterday morning of small pox. He was exposed about two weeks ago at Deerfield. The public schools in Monroe have closed and there is considerable excitement there.

Parties wishing to buy safes should examine into the merits of the Victor Safe. They are the best safe made for the price charged. We can furnish all desired information at this office. Read the card elsewhere.

Alf. James returned from Detroit last Saturday, where he went to receive treatment for one of his eyes. He was threatened with the loss of one eye from an ulcer, but the treatment is taking hold effectively, and it will undoubtedly restore the sight speedily.

A Tecumseh proprietor of a toboggin slide has been trying all winter to encourage the forming of ice, but although the slide was inclined, the weather clerk was not, and as a consequence the youths and maidens must hug on the back stoop, just the same as in summer—Hudson Post.

E. L. Wells will give a farewell masquerade party at the Sand Lake hotel Friday evening, Feb. 22. Music by Teachout & Bonney's orchestra. Costumes will be furnished by C. H. Richardson, of Adrian. Myron Mudgett and John Sickles will manage the floor. Bill $1.50. Mr. Wells will make this the big party of the season.

F. R. Metcalf, of Adrian, was in town Tuesday and gave the HERALD a friendly call. The house of which he has been manager for so long a time, has undergone a change by the admission of C. H. Metcalf, and the new firm intend to push business. The particulars of their new deal will be found set forth in detail in their card on the first page. Read it.

There is a sensation in the office of the comic paper, Judge. Lewis Gillam, caricaturist, drew a cartoon which he called "Mugwump Elaine," being a parody on Tennyson. The whole edition had been printed before it was discovered that the title of the cartoon had been set up by a brilliant compositor as "Mugwump Blaine." As Judge is a stalwart Blaine sheet, the edition had to be destroyed.

Below is a copy of one of the letters purporting to have been sent by the White Caps. The letter is in red ink, on one side is a tar barrel, and on the other, a skull and cross bones:

LODGE OF WHITE CAPS,
TECUMSEH.

Mr.—: Sir—We have organized a lodge of White Caps for the improvement of society in Tecumseh. Now if you don't go to work and support your wife as a white man should, we will make Tecumseh the hottest town you ever lived in.

LODGE OF WHITE CAPS, No. H, 432.

She is an ordained preacher of the Methodist Protestant church, a lady of generous culture and refined manners. She draws large audiences wherever she speaks, and receives a cordial welcome to the pulpits of the nation. All who heard Miss Shaw on Franchise Sept. 4, '88, were charmed with her oratorical powers, and will not miss her eloquent lecture on Social Purity, Saturday evening. A collection will be taken at close of address.

The Michigan Farmer says a man giving his name as O'Conner is reported to have taken a number of subscriptions for that paper in this county, representing himself as an agent. The Farmer calls him a fraud, as it does not employ traveling agents. If you want that excellent farmers' journal subscribe for it in connection with the HERALD.

Lewis Purdy, of Yorktown, N. Y., is said to be the oldest postmaster in the United States, both in years and service. He was appointed by President William Henry Harrison in 1841, is now 93 years old, and receives and distributes the mail twice a day, his only assistant being Mrs. Purdy, aged 99. A petition is being circulated asking the president to retire him from active service, and grant him a liberal pension for the rest of his life.

Many people in this county will be glad to learn that the yacht Coronet, on its way around the world with R. T. Bush and family, of Brooklyn, Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Denslow, of Poughkeepsie, and others on board, made remarkable time in sailing from Singapore to Ceylon. Monday, Dec. 17, it ran 269 miles; Tuesday, 18th, 263 miles, and in the first twenty-two hours of Wednesday, the 19th, it had made 243 miles, passing the ocean steamer Astronomer going in the same course. Death of a War Veteran.—"Old Colonel," the horse with a history, met his death on the night of the seventeenth, in his thirty-fifth year, in the barn of M. L. We are grieved to announce that Homer Burr, is absent from school this week on account of the death of his sister.

Dr. Begel of Holloway, vaccinated about twenty students to day.

Those who were vacciated last week are so touchy you can't get near them.

The boys of the Seminary have lately established a court of justice to preserve order, elected officers Friday of last week and are now awaiting for an opportunity to make some disorderly youth use more precaution in the future.

Medical men often puzzle themselves over the large sale that Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup enjoys. Its great popularity is due only to the excellent qualities possessed by this household medicine. 25 cts.

CALIFORNIA LETTER.

EDITOR HERALD:—As I have been giving a description of San Diego Bay and its surroundings I have not mentioned the subject of water, its importance and its supply. I will now give the plans pursued for obtaining it. In the early development of the country, though many crops could be successfully produced from the winter rains, it was found that for full success and profit, and for the successful production of many kinds of fruit it was necessary to irrigate in the dry season, and the only way to accomplish this was by sinking wells; consequently the country, as well as the towns, are dotted over with them which gives the country a very picturesque appearance, and puts us in mind of the pictures of Holland that we find in our history. This was attended with difficulty and expense, as the wells many of them had to be sunk to a great depth, and often thro' rock, and along the coast in most of the wells the water was so brackish that it could not be used for drinking or culinary use, and as the people in town had to depend on well water they were mostly supplied by water wagons from the good wells, and from this can be seen the need of a good supply.

To furnish this the Land and Town Company went up the Sweet Water Valley about six miles from here, (through this valley flows the Sweet Water river, which in the rainy season is quite a stream, but for about eight months of the year is dry for several miles above its mouth,) Here is a narrow gorge in the mountains with solid rock from the base to the summit. They built a dam to form a reservoir; the dam is 76 feet long and 46 feet thick at the base, and 396 feet long and 12 feet thick at the top, and 96 feet high from foundation, The work was begun Nov. 17th, 1886, and completed April 7th, 1888, at a cost, including the iron water mains, of $1,000,000; the dam is built entirely of stone and Portland cement, the cement alone costing $100,000. The reservoir forms a lake nearly four miles long and one mile wide; it receives the water from over 30 miles of watershed, and is estimated to supply Chula Vista, National City and surrounding country with abundance of water for domestic use and irrigation. The water is conducted to the country and towns through iron pipes, and under so much pressure that it furnishes the city with an efficient fire protection at an expense only for hose. Water rates for domestic use and irrigation are very low, and the system is of incalculable benefit to the country.

San Diego is at present supplied with water pumped from a well sunk in the bed of the San Diego river about three miles out, and by numerous wind mills in the city, but a water supply is being provided by an undertaking of great magnitude. Thirty miles from the city among the mountains a large reservoir has been made by daming in a narrow gorge; the water is conducted in a flume built along the side of the mountains and crossing the ravines on tressle work, and passes several times through the mountains in tunnels. Several smaller reservoirs have been provided along the route as feeders: the flume is completed to a point near the city, from where it will be conveyed to the city in iron pipes. It is not intended simply to supply the city with water, but to furnish water for irrigating the lands along the route, which will make available for profitable cultivation thousands of acres of land that are now comparatively barren.

The whole of this part of this State is susceptible of irrigation at a small expense by daming up the gorges and conveying the water in flumes or ditches, and this is being done as the country is taken up and improved, and money brought in.

Many think that because of the great expense for irrigation that the cultivation of the soil can't be made profitable. This is a great mistake, which, when the question is studied and figured out, will be seen. It must be taken into consideration that with water, crops can be grown the year round, and the farmer has no fear of injury to his crops from the elements, and can take his time to harvest his crops. Wheat, barley, etc., have stood from four to eight weeks waiting for the machines and received no injury. Again of some crops two and three crops can be taken from the same ground. There are but few insect pests to injure crops, and a person can work nearly every day in the year if they want to. Crops are sure every year and are always good, yet it requires labor to be successful, and he who expects to make money without work will find himself left. I have never seen any place where a person can realize as much for his labor as here. But there is a tendency here to slackness and indifferance, and is the cause of most of the complaint of no profit. The potato beetle and cabbage worm are not known here.

The land in this county is not all level and tillable, but is scattered through the mountains in tracts of from a few acres to thousands of acres. One can go into the country on any road and think that he has nothing but hills and mountains to travel over, but suddenly, on rounding a hill, he beholds a beautiful valley with fine ranches and orchards, or when farther back will find beautiful valleys capable of producing fine crops of grains, vegetables and fruit. Much of the level land is in small tracts, but all is strong soil and capable of producing good crops. To eastern people coming here the price of land seems high but after considering the matter thoroughly it will be found that lands here are really cheaper than in the east. But this country is destined to be occupied, owned and cultivated in small tracts, and will be principally a fruit country, but the farmers who go into the production of the grains will be successful. Much of the country is well adapted to raising stock and for dairy purposes, and the keeping of sheep is very profitable in many sections. One of the greatest misfortunes to the settlement of the back-country, has been the lack of good roads to reach them, and facilities for getting products to market; but these difficulties are fast being overcome by the building of good wagon roads, and the extension of the motor roads out into the country, and the building of standard railroads across the country.

Without money it requires a great deal of hard labor to establish a home here, but when once established I doubt whether there is another section of the country where one can live as easily and comfortably and enjoy life as fully as in this land of almost perpetual sun shine and equbale climate and perpetual summer.

THE IDEAL WOMAN.

Eyes a dark pair, cheeks as rosy;
Pearls her teeth are, fair her nose is.

When she laugheth, thunders laugh too;
When she frowneth, rainbows have to.

When she glaneeth, all the stars pale,
When she danceth, all the waves wail.

Bright and airy, sweet and dove like;
Could this fairy e'er my love like?
Ideal? Nay.

The blood of lords is in her veins,
The throne of empire is her aim;
In court and drawing room she reigns,
And fashion's world is at her feet.

She speaks and it is quickly done,
And no one asketh, is it wise?
There seems no law beneath the sun
That is not written in her eyes.
Ideal? Nay.

Her's is not race or pride of face,
Hers is not pomp of wealth or name;
A noble grace of mind, in place
Of meaner things—a heart aflame.

A pen of fire, an Orphean lyre,
A strong command of men who think;
With sceptered truth in fadeless youth,
She breaks oppression, link on link.
Ideal? Nay.

Her form is bowed, her eye is dim, and tremulous her toil-worn hands;
But she has won the crown of crowns in executing love's commands.

She gave her life that we might live, and then she lived that we might gain
Some fairer future among men, some honor worthy of her pain.

Her Master's law has made her great; she served, and so we crown her queen.
She rocks the cradle, rules the world; you know your chiefest friend, I ween.
Ideal? Yea.

—F. A. Marsh.

SHORTSIGHTEDNESS.

"He's a nice enough fellow when you meet him at the club or at his own house or at the office, but if you meet him on the street, by George, he'll look straight through you and never say as much as 'How de do.' I don't like that sort of a man."

"Nor I. I've noticed that about him many a time."

I heard that snatch of conversation the other day, and happened to know rather intimately the man they were talking about. He was one of the most genial men on earth, but the trouble with him was that he was painfully shortsighted. He couldn't see beyond the end of his nose to save his life, and on the street all humanity were alike to him until one of them spoke to him. Thus it is that the world makes no allowance for a shortsighted man. He often gets the reputation of being uppish when, in fact, he is nothing of the sort.

But besides this physical infirmity there is a sort of mental shortsightedness that is very embarrassing to the unfortunate possessor. For instance, I find it impossible to remember faces and names. I sometimes think that I have met too many people in this world. I have to be introduced to a person about six times on the average before I can remember that I ever saw that person before and then it requires ever so many meetings before I can venture on the name. For the last two years I have attended the baseball games with regularity and industry, yet to this day I cannot distinguish between Hardie Richardson and Jack Rowe, except by their positions in the field; and these two players don't look so very much alike either. Some folks who have not been so industrious in their application to baseball can tell at sight the name of any player, not only in the Detroit club, but in the whole league.

One day last summer I was driving with the lady who has the legal right to tell me what she thinks of me, when she said:

"Why didn't you take off your hat to that lady?"

"Bless me; I don't know her."

"Yes, you do. That was Mrs. Brinsmeade."

"Was it? Well, I did not recognize her."

"You might have recognized her if you had taken the trouble to. You are awful careless about such things. You are continually bowing to people you don't know and passing by others that you've been introduced to half a dozen times."

"Well, you know the trouble is that"——

"The trouble is that you are mentally lazy. The trouble is that you don't take the trouble. You are continually offending people and I wish you would be more careful. I am sure Mrs. Brinsmeade felt hurt."

"Oh, I shall make it all right with her next time I see her."

"How?"

"Well, I'll say I did not recognize her that day."

"She'll like that."

"Then I'll tell her that I see so many people that—no, that won't do either, will it?"

"I don't think it will."

"I see nothing for it, then, but to be extra genial the next time I meet her. I don't quite see how she can resist that."

For the next day or two I bowed indiscriminately to everybody, much to the surprise of most of them, but, all the same, I noticed that many of them bowed back at me and said: "Hello, old man." When coming to think of it I knew that I didn't know them and they didn't know me, so I imagine that there are lots more people in my fix.

A few days after I happened to pass the Brinsmeade residence and I saw Mrs. B. seated in a wicker rocking chair on the veranda reading a magazine. I thought I would stop long enough to remove any impression she might have that I was an unmannerly sort of individual, so I said cheerfully:

"Lovely day we're having after the long spell of wet weather."

She looked at me for a moment with calm disapproval in her eyes, and I saw at once that she was very much offended with me. I thought I could retrieve lost ground, so I plunged on, feeling very uncomfortable.

"I suppose you are reading Mr. Howells' story. You always were very fond of Howells."

There was more of surprise than disapproval in her glance this time. After a moment's hesitation she said:

"Yes, I am very fond of Mr. Howells' writings, but this is The Century Magazine. I believe he writes only for Harper's."

"Oh, that's so. I had forgotten about that. By the way, Kennan is writing some bright articles on Russia just now."

"Yes."

"Yes. He made quite a strike on those articles."

A solemn pause.

"Curious that fashion we have of taking off our hats after—well, to a lady, you know, after she has—after she's gone by, isn't it."

"I don't know. I'm sure I never noticed it."

"Well, naturally you wouldn't because, you know, you'd have gone by"——

I knew I was talking like a simpering idiot, but I couldn't stop myself.

"That's what I was saying. The lady never knows you take off your hat because—unless she turns round—and they don't generally—ah—turn round, you know. Then, of course, how is she to know you do take off your hat? I think that—very often they—ah—don't know, you know. Sometimes they think—they—sometimes think that a person doesn't recognize—that is, doesn't take off his hat when he does—after they've gone by."

By this time Mrs. Brinsmeade was looking at me with both fear and astonishment. If I could have shaken myself clear of the front gate I think I would have bolted down the street, but I clung to it with a sort of despairing helplessness, always hoping to retrieve myself, and always getting deeper into the difficulty.

"For instance, I recognized you the other day on Woodward avenue."

"I am surprised to hear it."

"Well, yes, I suppose you are. Most people are surprised when they hear I recognize anybody, but I—I am not very good at knowing people, but I would always recognize you. Yes; the trouble is that I am a very poor driver—very poor, indeed—and it takes most of my attention looking after the horse and trying to persuade him to go where I want to go. So I sometimes pass people on the street without knowing who they are. I've run over some of my best friends through trying to recognize somebody else. It costs me more every year to pay for those I run over than to keep the horse."

At this moment the front door opened and a lady came out. The moment I saw her I wondered how I could have been so stupid as to mistake anybody else for Mrs. Brinsmeade.

"Why; how do you do?" she said with that kindly smile of hers. "Let me introduce you to my sister, Miss Beacon-street, of Boston. Gertrude, this is Mr. Sharp, a friend of ours. Gerty just arrived today on her first visit to Detroit."

—Luke Sharp in Detroit Free Press.

St. Nicholas for 1889.

PEOPLE who have the idea that St. Nicholas Magazine is only for little children should look over the prospectus of that magazine for 1889, and they will discover that it is for children of all ages, "from five to eighty-five," as some one recently said of it. Indeed, while St. Nicholas is designed for girls and boys, it might almost be called a "family magazine," for the grown-up members of a household will find much to interest them in every number.

The editor, Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, calls the next volume an "all-round-the-world year," because it is to contain so many illustrated papers about the world in general—not dry geographical papers, but stories and sketches and tales of travel and adventure by land and sea—and all illustrated by the best artists. The features will include a serial story, "How We Made the Farthest North," by Gen. A. W. Greely, the well-known commander of the Greely Expedition; a serial about Canada, by Mrs. Catherwood, who is writing a serial story for The Century this year; "Indians of the Amazon," by Mrs. Frank R. Stockton. There are many papers about Europe, including a Christmas story of life in Norway, by H. H. Boyesen; articles on Holland and the Dutch, by Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge; "The Queen's Navy," by Lieut. F. Harrison Smith, R. N.; with illustrations of many of England's finest war ships; "The Winchester School," illustrated by Joseph Pennell; "English Railway Trains," by Wm. H. Rideing, etc., etc. The French papers include "Ferdinand de Lesseps and his two Ship Canals," and there are several interesting contributions on German, Italian and Russian subjects.

Under "Asia," comes "Boys and Girls in China," by Yan Phou Lee (a recent graduate of Yale); "Home Life in the East," by Mrs. Holman Hunt, and a number of papers about Japan. Under "Africa" there is a sketch of Henry M. Stanley, by Noah Brooks, and several stories about Egypt. Australia is not forgotten, nor the islands of the sea, and there are even to be stories of under the sea.

Of course the bulk of the contents will relate to American subjects, as usual. Mrs. Burnett, the author of "Little Lord Fauntleroy," contributes a story of New York called "Little Saint Elizabeth;" there will be papers describing how the government offices are conducted, papers about athletics, amateur photography, etc. The full prospectus will be sent to any one who wishes to see it by the publishers, The Century Co., of New York.

The Graphic recently said of St. Nicholas, the famous magazine, that it is only half-blessed."

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in lining membranes of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proven this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. DIXON & SON, 303 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

A Modern Miracle.

Mrs. J. W. Wentworth, of Elkhart, Ind., was long subject to pain in the side, shortness of breath, weakness, pain in the side, slight cough, swelling of the ankles and other symptoms of serious heart disease. She was expected to die at any time. Doctors in New York, Toledo, etc., failed to help her. But two bottles of Dr. Miles' New Cure for the Heart cured her three years ago and she has remained well ever since. Heart disease can be cured. Sold by Baker & Hall.

RHEUMATISM AND NEURALGIA

These twin diseases cause untold suffering. Doctors admit that they are difficult to cure—and do their patients. Paine's Celery Compound has permanently cured the worst cases of rheumatism and neuralgia—so say those who have used it.

"Having been troubled with rheumatism at the knee and foot for five years, I was almost unable to get around, and was very often confined to my bed for weeks at a time. I used only one bottle of Paine's Celery Compound, and was perfectly cured. I can now jump around, and feel as lively as a boy." FRANK CARGIN, Eureka, Nevada.

"Paine's Celery Compound has been a God-send to me. For the past two years I have suffered with neuralgia of the heart, doctor after doctor failing to cure me. I have now taken nearly four bottles of the Compound, and am free from the complaint. I feel very grateful to you." CHAS. H. LEWIS, Central Village, Ct.

Paine's Celery Compound

"I have been greatly afflicted with acute rheumatism, and could find no relief until I used Paine's Celery Compound. After using six bottles of this medicine I am now cured of rheumatic troubles." SAMUEL HUTCHINSON, So. Corinth, Me.

Effects Lasting Cures.

Paine's Celery Compound has performed many other cures as marvelous as these,—copies of letters sent to any address. Pleasant to take, does not disturb, but aids digestion, and entirely vegetable; a child can take it. What's the use of suffering longer with rheumatism or neuralgia?

WHAT IS IT?

KIDNEY F.E.C. TRADE MARK REMEDY

An interesting letter for Ladies:

Hastings Centre, Oswego Co., N. Y., August 26, 1888.

F. E. C. Medicine Co., Rochester, N. Y.—Dear Sirs—Pardon me the liberty of addressing strangers, but you are indeed benefactors of mankind. Your medicine is a boon and blessing to man and more especially women. It renews the very life principle in the system and takes away the terrible scourge of woman and in the place of weakness brings strength. It is indeed doing wonders for the afflicted and no one need to suffer from the terrible drain on the system arising from a disordered state of the kidneys, or from female weakness, that will try this, for it is sure. Should the hair be thin, harsh, dry, or turning gray, Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore the color, bring out a new growth, and render the old soft and shiny. "I am free to confess that a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor has convinced me that it is a genuine article. Its use has not only caused the hair of my wife and daughter to be but it has given my rather stunted mustache a respectable length and appearance."—R. Britton, Oakland, Ohio.

Abundant and Glossy,

"My hair was coming out (without any assistance from my wife, either). I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor, using only one bottle, and I now have as fine a head of hair as any one could wish for."—B. T. Schmittou, Dickson, Tenn.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and lively, and preserves the original color. My wife has used it for a long time with most satisfactory results."—Benjamin M. Johnson, M. D., Thomas Hill, Mo.

"My hair was becoming harsh and dry, but after using half a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it grew black and glossy. I cannot express the joy and gratitude I feel."—Mabel C. Hardy, Delavan, Ill.

PARABLE OF THE SOWER.

LESSON V, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, FEB. 3

Text of the Lesson, Mark iv, 10-20—Commit Verse 20—Golden Text, Mark iv, 23—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly, by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

Jesus had at this time been well through the land and his fame had spread abroad everywhere. He had been in all the cities and villages teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the Gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness and every disease (Matt. ix, 35); He had ordained the twelve and sent them forth to heal the sick and preach that the kingdom of Heaven was at hand (Matt. x, 1-8); He had proclaimed by words and deeds that He was the anointed One of God foretold by the prophets, Israel's Messiah, the Servant of Jehovah, Jehovah Himself; but they would not receive Him; His own townsmen of Nazareth seek His life and the Pharisees held a council against Him, how they might destroy Him (Luke iv, 29; Matt. xii, 14).

10. "And when He was alone, they that were about Him with the twelve, asked of Him the parable." Sitting in a boat on the sea of Galilee, He had been teaching the multitudes in parables as they stood on the shore. He had spoken the parables of the sower, the wheat and tares, the mustard seed and the leaven, and then sending the multitude away He went into the house (Matt. xiii, 1-36); and now, being alone with His disciples, they ask him the meaning of this parable.

11. "Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God." Now the kingdom as revealed to David and the prophets was no mystery, but a fact plainly stated over and over again, that a son of David should sit on David's throne, the Throne of the Lord at Jerusalem, reigning in righteousness over the twelve tribes of Israel, the whole nation knowing the Lord and rejoicing in Messiah, their king, and all nations of the earth looking to them, blessed through them and sending or going up from year to year to worship the Lord of Hosts at Jerusalem; these and many similar statements were not mysteries, but simple truths plainly stated. Neither was it a mystery, but the plain statement of Gabriel to Mary that her son was the promised Son of David to sit on David's throne and reign over the house of Jacob forever (Luke i, 32, 33). But that the Messiah should come and the kingdom not come; that He should die and rise again and return to Heaven without restoring all things of which the prophets had spoken; that He should have to come a second time for this restoration; that Gentiles should for a time be put on a level with Jews, and a people gathered out of all nations for His name; what would be the condition of things on earth during this "gathering out" process between His going away and return; these were things kept secret from the foundation of the world (Matt. xiii, 35); these are some of the mysteries of the kingdom contained in these parables, and referred to so often in the epistles. (Eph. i, 9, 10; iii, 4-6; v, 32; Rom. xi, 25; II Thess. ii, 7, 8; Rev. xvii, 5; x, 7; I Cor. xv, 51, etc.)

12. "Unto them that are without, all these things are done in parables, that seeing they may see and not perceive; ——" If they persist in remaining without, notwithstanding all the gracious invitations to enter in, they can blame no one but themselves for their blindness, and ignorance and hardness of heart. Some one has said that a parable is like the shell of a nut which keeps the sweet meat within for the diligent, but from the indolent who are too slothful to diligently seek it.

13. "Known ye not this parable? How then will ye know all parables?" He seems to wonder at their dullness in not readily seeing the meaning of this first and, perhaps, most simple of all parables.

14. "The sower Soweth the Word," and "The Seed is the Word of God." (Luke viii, 11.) It is incorruptable seed which causes the one who receives it into his heart to be born again. (I Peter, i, 23). It is the seed which abiding in the believer keeps him from sinning against God. (I John iii, 9; Ps. cxix, 11.) It is manna from Heaven to be gathered every morning and eaten often every day. (John vi.) It is milk for babes and strong meat for those of full age. (Heb. v, 12-14.) It is as a fire and a hammer. (Jer. xxiii, 29); it is the sword of the Spirit. (Eph. vi, 17.) It is the joy and rejoicing of the believer's heart, sweeter than honey, better than thousands of gold or silver. (Jer. xv, 16; Ps. cxix, 72, 103.)

15. "And these are they by the wayside, where the word is sown." We find that the seed falls on four different kinds of ground, in each case with a different result. The ground represents to us the human heart, and it must be the heart of one who has heard the word of God so that we might be safe in saying that the parable refers only to church goers or those who at some time, in some way, hear the glad tidings of the love of God in Christ Jesus. In these wayside hearers the ground or the heart being so hard the seed only lies on the surface; and this is not the intention of the sower, for it is only the entrance of the Word that giveth light. (Ps. cxix, 130.)

16. "These are they likewise which are sown on stony ground." Here is a joyful hearing and receiving of the Word; not only churchgoers, but attentive and appreciative listeners, who can tell a good sermon when they hear it, and enjoy the truth to a certain extent.

17. "Have no root, * * * endure but for a time." The work is not thorough, but too much on the surface; there is no depth to them; they are too emotional. They make a fine spurt for a while and seem to go ahead of many; are often received into the church with great rejoicings and pointed out as wonderful trophies of the Grace of God. They themselves wonder at the more quiet demeanor of others, and are astonished that the whole church is not zealous as they are; they would put real life into all the services and lift all Christians up to their proper plane. It is really inspiring to hear them; would to God that they might continue.

"When affliction or persecution ariseth for the world's sake, immediately they are offended." "The race is not to the swift nor the battle to the strong." (Eccl. ix, 11). They had not been tried, and now, when tried, they can't stand it, for in time of temptation or trial they fall away. They thought it would be all sunshine, but it has proved different; they could not stand fire, their eyes were not on the Master.

18, 19. "Sown among thorns * * * the cares of this world, the deceitfulness of riches and the lusts of other things choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful." Luke says they bring no fruit to perfection. These also seem to be members of the visible church and to have made a profession of faith in Christ, for fruit is expected from them, but it is not found.

20. "Sown on good ground, * * * hear, receive, bring forth fruit, thirty, sixty, an hundred fold." Luke says that this soil represents an honest and good heart which hears the word, keeps it, and brings forth fruit with patience.

"PASSION POET OF TARRYTOWN."

Palmer B. Wells Convicted of Sending Her Vile Letters.

NEW YORK, Jan. 25.—Minna Irving, "the passion poet of Tarrytown," in a green silk dress and bonnet and a long seal sacque, was in the United States circuit court Thursday to prosecute Palmer B. Wells for sending vile letters to her. She testified that she had received 500 or 600 letters from him and knew his hand. They had a disagreement last August, and in October last she sued him for $50,000 for defamation of character. He is stenographer with a slender salary. She swore that four letters she received on Dec. 3 were in his handwriting. Her mother, Mrs. Odell, swore to the same effect. Frank Roland, Sinclair Sanderson, Chauncey L. Ayers and John King, business men and friends of Wells, testified that they were familiar with his handwriting and that the letters in their opinion were not written by him. Joseph R. Scott testified that Wells' reputation was good. Wells testified that he did not write the letters and first saw them after his arrest. He was asked if he put in an advertisement in the daily papers on Dec. 6 reflecting on Miss Irving's character. He said he had no recollection of it. Anthony Comstock testified that he believed that Wells wrote the letters. The jury found Wells guilty, and recommended him to mercy. He was taken to Ludlow Street jail, and will be sentenced next Monday.

THE WORK OF WHITE-CAPS.

They Demolish Houses in Ohio and Whip a Man in New York.

MANSFIELD, Ohio, Jan. 26.—A News special from Jeromeville, Ohio, said: Friday night about 11 o'clock a band of about seventy-five White-Caps made their appearance in the streets of the village. Who they were and where they came from none but themselves know, but it is generally believed that the band was composed chiefly of villagers and residents of the surrounding country. The men were masked and armed with guns and revolvers. None of them were recognized.

WHITE CAP IN UNIFORM.

Three houses in the town were demolished, two of them unoccupied. The other was occupied by a family named McColin. Mrs. McColin is accused of being an outspoken sympathizer of the Chesrowns, who were recently acquitted of murder. The mob threatened to hang McColin, but he and his wife made their escape and their whereabouts are unknown. The mob then visited the Chesrown houses in the country, but failed to find any of them at home. They left a White-Cap notice threatening them with death if caught. Great excitement prevails and trouble is expected.

Let the Others Load Their Guns.

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., Jan. 26.—James Cullinton, a dissipated man, living at Chateauguay, N. Y., was taken from his house Friday night and whipped by a band of white-capped men. He is badly injured. He had received a notice signed "H. W., Chief of the Northern Division of White Caps," but paid no attention to it. Several citizens who have received similar notices are apprehensive of trouble. Notices of the same kind have been served on residents of other villages in northern New York and Vermont. One has been received by a hotel keeper at South Hero, Vt., which is a prohibition town. He is threatened with rough treatment unless he stops selling liquor.

Bloomington Has 'Em Also.

BLOOMINGTON, Ills., Jan. 26.—The White Caps have made their presence known in this city. Friday night notes of warning signed "the White Caps" were delivered at a number of disreputable houses, whose inmates are ordered to leave the city within five days.

Looks Like a Murder.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Jan. 28.—No attempt was made to run cars on the Atlantic Avenue company's lines yesterday, and all was quiet among the strikers. Henry W. Adams, a stableman, was found dead Saturday night on the sidewalk under an open second-story doorway of the company's stables. Death was apparently caused by a fall from the doorway. It was learned, however, that the night watchman had admitted to the building three strikers who said they wanted to talk to Adams and try to persuade him to strike. These three men, Moses Stetson, John Collier and Kernan Graham, were arrested on suspicion. They denied having used violence, but said that Adams had become frightened and had run to the doorway and either jumped or fallen out.

Half Starved and Then Poisoned.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Jan. 26.—The Journal's LaCrosse, Wis., special says: Saturday morning Robert Schen, a shoemaker, bought some smoked sausage and the whole family including five children ate heartily of it. They soon became deathly sick. Physicians were called and by hard work the older members of the family were gotten out of danger. It is doubtful if the younger ones recover. Schen had been in jail for abusing his wife and the family were half starved. The matter will be investigated.

Death of C. A. Washburn.

NEW YORK, Jan. 28.—C. A. Washburn, ex-minister to Paraguay, and brother of Senator-elect Washburn, of Minnesota, died of apoplexy Saturday, aged 67.

Our Nellie Is Home Again.

NEW YORK, Jan. 28.—Mrs. Nellie Grant-Sartoris arrived here yesterday on the steamship Etruria on a visit to her mother, Mrs. Gen. Grant.

Is Consumption Incurable?

Read the following: Mr. C. H. Morris, Newark, Ark., says: "Was down with Abscess of Lungs, and friends and physicians pronounced me an Incurable Consumptive. Began taking Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, am now on my third bottle and able to oversee the work on my farm. It is the finest medicine ever made."

Jesse Middlewart, Decatur, Ohio, says: "Had it not been for Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption I would have died of Lung troubles. Was given up by doctors. Am now in best of health." Try it. Sample bottles free.

C. A. Wright & Co.

The Western Bullet.

Some years ago Wyatt Earp was a law unto himself, and his revolvers were his executioners. When his brother was city marshal of Tombstone, A. T., Wyatt kept him company, partly for fun and partly for profit and glory. After the big battle with the McClowrys, in which the Earps killed seven or eight men, the latter spent most of their time dodging bullets. Friends of the dead men had sworn vengeance, and it was not long before they had it.

One night Morgan Earp, still another brother, was assassinated in a saloon in Tombstone. No one saw the murderer, the bullet coming through the window, but Wyatt made up his mind that the culprit was Frank Stillman. The next morning Stillman took breakfast at 9 o'clock in Tucson, some ninety miles away. The second morning after the tragedy Wyatt Earp, Doc Halliday, Texas Jack, and two or three others rode into Tucson. Stillman was found at the depot, where he was preparing to take a train. The pursuers opened fire as soon as they saw him, and in two minutes he had twenty bullets in him. At the inquest the fact that Stillman had appeared in Tucson the morning after the killing of Earp was urged as a proof that he could not have been the murderer, but Wyatt held that a ride of ninety miles in twelve hours at night was nothing for a frontiersman who had an Earp after him, and was able as Stillman was to get relays of horses. This struck the jury forcibly, and the killing was set down as a justifiable homicide.—San Francisco Dispatch.

Angels Everywhere.

Michael Angelo (poet, painter, sculptor—three men in one—a trinity of genius) stood one day with folded arms, in wrapt contemplation of a block of marble. Presently a pupil stepped to his side and said softly: "Master, what seest thou?" "Hush!" replied Angelo, "I see an angel in the stone, and I mean to chisel it out."

There is an angel in human nature—in every jailbird; in yonder shape of painted shame, fitly attended by shadows of fallen womanhood; in that cutthroat, crawling under the gaslight; in this little girl, adrift with bare feet on the icy pavement; in the diminutive arab of the street, born in iniquity and rocked to sleep with curses. Yes, the angel is there, in slum as in parlor, in squalor as in refinement, in vice as in virtue. Fall to, and bring it out! John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, saw a criminal led forth to execution. "There goes John Wesley," exclaimed he, "but for the grace of God."—Clergyman in St. Louis Republic.

To Prove Honey.

Mr. Worthington G. Smith, the eminent microscopist, finds that genuine honey can be readily distinguished from manufactured honey by the microscope. The former has few or no sugar crystals and abounds with pollen grains, while the imitations have little else than these crystals, with rarely a trace of pollen grains. The honeyed taste of the manufactured article, he thinks, may come from honey comb or beeswax being mashed up with the article used in the manufacture. Each class of plants has its own specific form of pollen grain, and Mr. Smith says that any one conversant with this branch of botany could tell from what part of the world the honey came by studying the pollen grains that it might contain.—Public Opinion.

Quite Impossible.

What is this wild talk which is now disfiguring some of our esteemed contemporaries as to a surplus of Kentucky women? There are many things of which there can be too much, and many persons afflicted with superfluity, but how there can be too many of the glorious women of Kentucky we do not affect to understand. Nor do we understand how any of them of marriageable age can remain unmarried save from choice or freakishness.—New York Sun.

Fashion's Changes.

Mr. Lightpurse—My dear, I see that in London the 5 o'clock tea has been succeeded by 4 o'clock. Couldn't you advance a step further and have your 5 o'clock at 3?

Mrs. L.—I've been thinking of it.

Mr. L.—I wish you would. Three o'clock is so soon after lunch that folks can't eat much, you know.—Philadelphia Record.

Cherry county, Neb., with an area larger than several eastern states, hasn't a practicing physician within its borders.

HOW CAN PARENTS

allow their children to cough and strain and cough and cry by: "Oh! it is only a little cold," and keep giving them cheap and dangerous medicines, until they are down with lung fever or consumption, when they can be so easily relieved by BEGGS' CHERRY COUGH SYRUP? It has no superior, and few equals. J. J. ORR, Druggist.

WHAT ON EARTH

Is the reason people will not, can not, or do not see any difference in cheap nostrums put up by Cheap John houses or irresponsible parties at enormous profits, rather than take a medicine of world wide reputation and one that is giving universal satisfaction at equal price? No medicine in the world is giving such unparalleled satisfaction for purifying the blood as BEGGS' BLOOD PURIFIER & BLOOD MAKER, and every bottle that does not do its work will cost you nothing.

If Paris is France

Gen. Boulanger is the French Man of Destiny.

A GREAT POLITICAL VICTORY WON.

His Principal Competitor Beaten by Over 80,000 Votes—Scenes of Intense Excitement Prevented from Developing into Wild Turbulence by a Great Show of Gen d'Armes—Floquet Ministry Doomed.

PARIS, Jan. 28.—The complete returns from the department of the Seine give Boulanger, 244,070, Jacques, 162,521, Boulin, 19,760, other candidates, 10,338. Boulanger's majority, 54,432. The Boulangists confidently predict the fall of the Floquet ministry, and the dissolution of the chamber.

GEN. GEORGE ERNEST BOULANGER.

The city is carefully guarded by the police and military to prevent disturbance.

Gen. Boulanger will resign his seat for the department of the Seine, to which he was elected yesterday, and retain his representation in the chamber of deputies of the department of the Nord.

During Saturday night there was much excitement and considerable disorder throughout the city. Many brawls and street fights occurred, which in some cases were very serious. The disorder was particularly great in the vicinity of Montmartre and Faubourg temple, where quite a large number of persons were wounded. Yesterday morning opened bright and fair, and the streets were thronged at an early hour.

There was great excitement in the boulevards after the result of the election became known. The police were not aggressive, but their presence in strong force restrained whatever latent desire to raise a disturbance may have lurked in the breasts of the more jubilant or discomfited of the crowd. Ten thousand persons alternately sang and cheered outside the Cafe Durand, especially when Gen. Boulanger appeared at a window and bowed his acknowledgments. When Boulanger, upon alighting from his carriage, passed the restaurant opposite the Cafe Durand, where the friends of the government were assembled, he was vehemently hissed by the adherents of the ministry. The Boulangists replied with a shower of stones and the hissing ceased. The singing of patriotic songs in the streets was continued until long after daylight.

For the first time in Paris carriages were largely employed to convey voters to the polls. Boulanger's carriages were the first in the field, and his canvassers were provided with the names and addresses of the Panama shareholders and other classes of electors. Louise Michel worked hard on behalf of the general.

Since July, 1887, Gen. Boulanger has received in the different elections an aggregate vote of 700,000. The Republicans, during the same period, claim 1,200,000. One enterprising morning newspaper engaged 250 special reporters, each of whom it provided with a cab and thirty bicyclists to bring the results in each section with the greatest possible speed.

The prefect of police enlisted the services of a large number of householders to aid the police in maintaining order. Troops were held in readiness at various points, and cavalry were ordered to patrol the streets and disperse all gatherings. Municipal guards lined the boulevards, and in every quarter the police and military were well prepared to suppress an outbreak.

The cabinet held a special meeting last night in view of the result of the Seine election, and remained in session from 11 o'clock until 1 this morning. Premier Floquet informed President Carnot that the ministry was prepared to resign if the president thought such action advisable. Several ministers advocated the reconstruction of the cabinet on a broader basis. President Carnot awaits conferences with various members of the cabinet before giving his decision.

President Carnot has consulted with MM. Ferry, Waldeck-Rousseau, Tirard, Raynal, and others. The ministers separated after deciding upon police measures to preserve order.

OUR NATIONAL LAW-MAKERS.

What They Are Doing for the Country's Good—Bills Passed, Etc.

WASHINGTON CITY, Jan. 23.—Chandler presented in the senate yesterday a petition from citizens of Orangeburg, S. C., asking national protection in the exercise of the right of suffrage. Plumb presented a bill authorizing the district commissioners to regulate the rates of fares, etc., in the district during the inauguration period. The tariff bill was taken up at 1:30 and Reagan's amendment reducing the wool duty to 25 per cent. ad valorem, was rejected. The duty on white pine lumber was reduced to $1.50 per 1,000 feet. An amendment provides that if foreign governments impose an export duty on lumber the American duty shall remain as under the present law. A number of finance committee amendments were agreed to, slightly increasing the duty on various articles in most cases. An amendment was adopted permitting winemakers to use free of tax, the necessary spirits to fortify their wines up to an alcoholic strength of 14 per cent. Plumb tried to get a reduction of the duty on iron hoops or bands, but failed. An amendment was adopted establishing a customs commission of five, with salaries of $7,500 per annum each, the members to be appointed as other civil officers by the president and senate. The date for the bill to take effect was changed from February next to July 1 next, and then the bill was passed—ayes, 32; nays, 30—a party vote. The senate then adjourned.

The house took up the river and harbor bill and increased the appropriation for the improvement at Portage lake, Michigan, to $20,000. The remainder of the day was spent in a squabble as to what part of the country ought to get most of the money, and in a season of filibustering, and without further action, the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Jan. 24.—The resolution providing for a joint meeting of the two houses of congress on Feb. 13 next, at 1 p. m., to count the electoral vote was passed by the senate yesterday. Riddleberger and Blodgett made explanations of the pair which had so much to do with the passage of the tariff bill. Riddleberger said he thought both of them misunderstood the agreement, as he had only intended to pair on an amendment. The bill granting the Big Horn Southern railway right-of-way through the Crow reservation in Montana was passed. The anti-trust bill was considered briefly, a verbal amendment made and the measure laid over. The bill for the relief of the State National bank of New Orleans, for cotton seized by the government after the war of the rebellion was amended and passed, and a conference ordered. The Union Pacific funding bill was taken up so as to make it "unfinished business" and then laid over. The bill to permit the Baltimore & Ohio railway to lay tracks across certain streets during the inauguration period was passed. The remainder of the day was devoted to District affairs and a brief executive session, after which the senate adjourned.

The house considered the sundry civil bill and added an appropriation of $50,000 for repairs to the Chicago custom house. The steam press question then came up and motions were made to strike out the clause allowing only 1 cent per thousand impressions (withdrawn), to make the royalty 50 cents per thousand and to make it $1 per thousand. A lively debate on the labor question followed, and pending a vote the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Jan. 25.—Very little business was done in the senate yesterday. Petitions were presented from various temperance organizations praying for prohibition, and one from Maine farmers asking protection to agriculture. Then the death of Representative Burnes was announced, appropriate resolutions adopted and the senate adjourned.

The prayer of the house chaplain was listened to with more than usual attention, and it was mostly devoted to the death of Representative Burnes, which sad event was announced as soon as the journal had been read. Resolutions of regret were unanimously adopted with the usual clauses with reference to the funeral, and the house adjourned. Mr. Burnes' remains were sent to his home in Missouri yesterday, accompanied by Vest, Teller, Coke (senators) and Mansur, Stone, Wade, Sayers, Bynum, Henderson, and Perkins.

WASHINGTON CITY, Jan. 26.—Senator Cullom's credentials as senator for six years more were filed in the senate yesterday. The bill to increase the maximum for foreign money orders to $100 was passed, as was the pension and military academy appropriations. The vote for the relief of the Louisiana state bank was reconsidered owing to new facts which have come to light, and the bill was recommitted. The anti-trust bill was taken up and an amendment agreed to making a trust liable for damages to those who are injured thereby. An amendment was offered bringing under the penalties provided any one who shall act as manager, agent, etc., of a trust ninety days after the passage of this bill, and debate was going on when the bill was laid aside and the Union Pacific funding bill taken up, but nothing was done on it and another amendment to the anti-trust bill was offered making the act apply whether the trust is a home or a foreign concern.

The house spent the day on the sundry civil bill and adopted the amendments proscribing steam-plate printing pressess in the bureau of engraving and printing.

WASHINGTON CITY, Jan. 28.—The speaker laid the senate substitute for the Mills tariff bill before the house Saturday, with the senate request for a conference on the same. Only once before had such a request been refused and the Republicans vigorously urged assent to the proposition this time; but the Democrats made the point of order that the rules of the house required reference of the bill to the ways and means committee, and the speaker sustained the point. Edmunds' resolution on the Panama canal (reasserting the "Monroe doctrine") was reported, recommitted and the committee given leave to report again at any time, and obtain a vote after three hours' debate. The resolution appropriating $500,000 to the heirs of Capt. Eads as payment on the Mississippi jetties was adopted. The rest of the day was spent in committee of the whole on the sundry civil bill, but nothing accomplished and at 4:30 p. m. the house adjourned to Monday.

THE PRESSURE HAS "RIZ."

Minnesota Breathes Freely and Her Senator Is Vindicated.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Jan. 24.—The report of the house committee investigating the alleged wickedness in the process of nominating a United States senator was brought in yesterday morning, and it was in brief that some attempts at bribing had been made, but neither Washburn nor Sabin was involved.

The first ballot elected Washburn, as follows: W. D. Washburn, 107; Durant, 20; Start, 9; Wilson, 2; scattering, 3; whole number of votes cast, 141; necessary to a choice, 71.

Senator Cullom Formally Elected.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., Jan. 23.—The two houses of the Illinois legislature, in joint session Wednesday, balloted for United States senator, and Hon. Shelby M. Cullom was declared elected to succeed himself.

THE FIRST QUARREL.

"The habit of smoking is vulgar, you know,
Only fit for those people whose instincts are low,"
Insisted his wife as she sat by his side,
To which opposition he calmly replied.
"You'd surely call Milton a high minded man;
Not so, my dear wife? His life didn't pan
Out a failure, you know; well, now I insist
If all smokers are low, he's down on your list.

"Carlyle, you'll admit, was a genius, eh wahr?
(Excuse me a jiff while I light my cigar.)
He smoked like a chimney, Clarissa, my dear;
While Lamb smoked each month more than I smoked last year.
Old Newton at church, with his conscience quite clear,
Fumed with tobacco the pews in the rear.

"Your Dickens smoked, too, while Thackeray's clothes
Were soaked with tobacco fumes through to his hose;
In short, dear Clarissa, my list would contain
The name of each genius from Raleigh to Twain."
Then smiling, she answered with logic elate,
"You promise to swear off until you are great!"

"HIS SON DAN'L."

One mid afternoon, as I reached the crest of an ascent from which I could look down into a cove divided up into half a dozen farms, I heard loud voices on the road ahead, and presently saw two persons seated on a rock. While yet ten rods away, I heard the voice of one of them, saying:

"Now, Dan'l, I can't and I won't stand it no mo'!"

The other made no reply, and when I advanced I found the pair to be father and son—the latter a boy of 18. The usual salutations were passed, and as I sat down beside them I soon found the boy to be unusually intelligent and keen. We talked about general matters for a few minutes, and then Dan'l turned to his father and said:

"Might ask him, pop. I reckon he knows."

"I war' calkerlatin' to, Dan'l—yes, I was. I'm glad him cum along, I am. Will you abide by what him says?"

"I will. Go ahead, pop."

"Stranger," said the old man, as he put a finger on my knee, "I've bin fussin' with Dan'l fur two years back. He's bin wuss on me nor the itch, and he's nigh killed his mam. I brung him out yere to hev a talk and settle it, and it seems as if the Lord had sent you this way jist in time. Be you what is called an eddecated man?"

"Yes, more or less."

"You've bin around a right smart?"

"Yes."

"You know about arithmetic, geography, grammar, writin' and spellin'?"

"Yes."

"Thank the Lord that you hev cum! Now, Dan'l, he'un will down you in two minits, and you hev agreed to abide."

"So I will, pop. Just ask he'un to talk."

"Well, stranger, it's this: Dan'l hain't got no sense. He wants to leave hum and go fur hisself. He wants to know mo', and hev better clothes and mo' money than his father."

"Well?"

"Wall, I say he shouldn't adoo it. It's too flighty. It can't be did. He's bin foolin' hisself."

"What do you want to leave home for?" I asked of the boy.

"That I may go to school and get an education," he replied. "We've had a school here, and I can read and write and spell and figure, but I want to go higher."

"Look at the cheek of it!" shouted the father. "He knows mo' now than I do, and yit he wants to go higher."

"What plans have you got for the future?" I queried of Dan'l.

"I want to go to some good school for two or three years, and then I want to study for a profession."

"A purfeshun!" howled the father, as he sprang up. "Whoop! A son of ole Jim Nevins cryin' fur a purfeshun! If anybody had toled me I'd live to see this day, I'd hev tooken his scalp!"

"I want to go into law or medicine if I can," said Dan'l.

"Whoop! That's the last hair what breaks the cambel's back!" roared the old man. "I'm powerfully minded to take the ongrateful cub and wring his neck! Why don't you go fur him, stranger? Why don't you turn to and use him up?"

"Are you opposed to education?"

"I be and I been't! When a man kin read and write and figger he's got 'nuff. That's all I ever had, and I've got along right smart. If Dan'l does as well he may be thankful."

"How well have you done? How old are you?"

"Fifty."

"How much are you worth?"

"More'n a thousand dollars, sir."

"That is, you've worked thirty years or more to accumulate a thousand or twelve hundred dollars' worth of land and a mule or two?"

"Yes."

"After Dan'l has been educated he can earn as much in six months."

"W—what!"

"Did you ever have a law suit!"

"Onct."

"How much did you pay your lawyer?"

"Cost me $25."

"How much time did he put in?"

"Not more'n two hours, dog gone him!"

"Then why shouldn't Dan'l earn $25 in two hours?"

"He's got you stuck, pap!" laughed the son.

"How much was your doctor bill last year?"

"Thirty dollars."

"And the doctor was not in your house over half a day, all told. Why shouldn't Dan'l earn $30 the same way? That doctor earned $20 where you earn $1."

"Whoop! The strangur is also agin me!" shouted the old man, as he cracked his heels together.

"So I am. Let Dan'l educate himself, and he can buy and sell you inside of a year. Do you know what income a good lawyer in Knoxville or Chattanooga can count on?"

"I never thought."

"Well, it's enough in one year to buy the whole of this cove, and every calf and hog and mule within ten miles of it. It's the same with the doctors."

He actually turned pale as he looked from Dan'l to me and back again, and up and down the road. By and by he asked:

"Stranger, hev you a—pur—purfeshun?"

"I have."

"And will you allow that you have made as high as—as $3 a day?"

"Yes, five times that."

He stared at me with open mouth, unable to say a word.

"You don't know much about the world outside," I said, as I pulled him down and offered him a cigar. "You work hard on your farm and you get ahead slowly. You can hire a negro to do farm work for $3 a week. Carpenters, blacksmiths, painters and such men get from $3 to $3.50 per day. If Dan'l was a good bookkeeper he could get $1,000 or $1,200 a year."

"C-could he?"

"Certainly, but he must have education."

"Stranger, did you ever make $3 a day?" sternly asked the old man.

"Yes."

"Four?"

"Yes."

"Five?"

"Yes."

"Dog gone me, but I can't believe it! And it's all dun by eddecashun?"

"That's the capital you start with. As a clerk, Dan'l could be dressed up, work eight or nine hours a day and have an income of from $10 to $20 a week."

"Didn't I tell you all this, pap?" queried the boy, who had been a silent but eager listener to every word.

"Whoop! So ye did, Dan'l, but dog gone me if I smuggled to it! I can't smuggle yit!"

I went home with them, and I found the mother more obstinate than the father.

"D' ye mean fur to say!" she demanded as we all fell to smoking after supper, "that eddecashun is goin' to help our boy Dan'l airn three hull dollars a day?"

"I do, ma'am."

"I can't believe it. Jim, how much would ye pay the guv'ner of the state to work fur ye?"

"Not over fo' bits a day."

"That gits ye, stranger!" chuckled the mother.

"But turn it the other way, woman. The governor is educated and is not obliged to do farm work. His salary for a year is more than you have made in thirty."

"Whoop! That gits you, old woman!" shouted the husband. "Now I begin to glimmer. Now I kin see the difference!"

"A bookkeeper wouldn't be worth his board to you, because you have no accounts to keep. He is, however, worth a thousand dollars a year to some merchant in Nashville."

"Whoop! Yer dead right, stranger! Me'n the ole woman has bin fules! I couldn't see whar' eddecashun helped a man to build a stone wall, hoe corn or cut hay, but I see what it is fitten fur now. It's us dog goned, knock-kneed, moss-backed cannibals who don't know nuthen' which hev got to do the heavy work and wear old clothes!"

"Didn't I tell you, pap?" said Dan'l.

"You did—whoop!—but I was too thickheaded to see it. You shall go to skule and be eddecated."

"But if he becomes a rascal and is hung fur it, somebody has got to be responsible!" added the mother, as she looked straight at me over the cloud of smoke.

And next day, when I went away, I left my address, so that I could be hunted up and shot.—M. Quad in Detroit Free Press.

Dining with Stonewall Jackson.

Dr. Hunter McGuire, of Richmond, Va., related to a reporter the other day the following reminiscence: "Dec. 25, 1861, is a memorable Christmas to me. During the winter of 1861-62 the little 'Army of the Valley' was encamped near Winchester, and my father on Christmas day gave me a dinner party. About twenty-five guests were at the table. Among them were Gen. T. J. Jackson, Maje. Pendleton, Hawkes, Harman, Jones, Botts, Marshall, Kent, Col. Allen, Dr. Harvey Black and others. Although the table was abundantly supplied with the good things for which that section was famous, Gen. Jackson dined on buttermilk, corn bread and butter. At this time he lived very abstemiously. It is a solemn and melancholy fact that of all the twenty-five people at the table that day I am the only one now alive, and when I related this to my children a few days ago one of the little rascals kindly suggested that my turn was next."—Baltimore Sun.

Beer for Workingmen.

In many establishments in Albany workingmen demand the privilege of bringing beer into factories for consumption at the noon hour, and in at least one establishment beer is paid for by the proprietors. Few are aware that in all the lithographic establishments of this country, where the work is mainly done by German workingmen, a stipulation requires the proprietors to furnish beer as a part of the employes' wages. In the mammoth lithographic department of Judge at New York, for instance, where 600 men are employed, each one receives, under the terms of his contract with his employers, three pints of beer a day. The beverage is lager beer, and over seven barrels are thus consumed daily. An effort was made at one time to see if a reform could not be instituted in this matter, but such serious trouble was threatened that it had to be abandoned.—Philadelphia Times.

Trees with Large Leaves.

Trees of the palm family have larger leaves than any others. The Inaja palm, which grows on the banks of the Amazon, has leaves which reach a length of from thirty to fifty feet and are ten or twelve feet in breadth. Specimens of the leaves of the Talipot palm, a native of Ceylon, have been met with that were twenty feet long and eighteen feet broad. These leaves are used by the natives to make tents and form very efficient shelters from the rain. The leaves of the double cocoanut palm are often thirty feet long and several feet wide. When the wind is strong they clash together with a noise that may be heard at a great distance. Only one leaf is produced each year, and they are so firmly attached to the stem of the tree and so strong in themselves that a man may sit on the end of one and rock to and fro in perfect safety.—New York Telegram.

Domestic Animals in Ireland.

It appears from the official statistics that last year there were 557,405 horses in Ireland, which was an increase of 8,201 as compared with 1886. There were 199,512 asses, being an increase of 3,267, and 29,829 mules, as against 29,195. There was a decrease of 26,520 in the number of cattle, but the increase in pigs and sheep was 145,314 and 11,788 respectively. There were 27,172 goats, being an increase of 5,558, and there was an increase of upward of 550,000 in the number of poultry.—London Truth.

Mrs. Langtry's Hosiery.

A gentleman in the custom house is responsible for the information that Mrs. Langtry has all of her hosiery made in England. The goods are made of the very finest silk thread, and in color harmonize with her dresses. For every costume Mrs. Langtry has a set of hose. These articles are made very long, and cost, including the duty, $12 per pair.—New York Star.

In Memory of Leota Lansing.

Her life was in its budding time
Of hope and promise bright,
Of broadening aims, of waxening powers,
And fair with love's soft light.
Sudden, across her happy way
There swept a chilling breath,
And lo! her feet were on the brink
Of the dark river of death.

Its raging waters had no power
Her brave soul to affright,
She saw beyond, the shining shore
Hid from our grosser sight:
To sorrowing loved ones, fond farewells,
And words of comfort gave,
And with serene, unfaltering trust
Went down into the wave.

Then fell a calm upon the flood,
All shallow grew the tide
And well they knew who watched her go,
Heaven's gates stood open wide.
For on her face its glory shone,
And left such radiance there,
That, even in death, the cast-off clay
Seemed fair as angels are

O, mourning ones, weep not for her
Who knows no grief nor pain;
Her feet are on the heavenly heights,
Heights that you too may gain;
You walk to-day a weary way,
But she has reached life's goal,
And hears, for earth's discordant sounds
Celestial anthems roll.

Then, through your sorrow, let this thought
In soothing cadence flow,
"God took our darling to Himself Because he loved her so."

MRS. L. E. TAYLOR.

A Fine Distinction.

Those familiar with unlearned country folk know that they are not wanting in ability to analyze and make a distinction. A lady who was riding with a New Hampshire farmer, and passing a field of newly mown grass, exclaimed: "Oh, how fragrant that hay smells!" "It smells more of hard work," replied the farmer.

An English rector in a Sussex parish once visited a poor old widow, who had nine or ten children. All of them, except the daughter, had gone out into the world and left her. At last the daughter married and left the mother alone.

"Dame," said the rector, "you must feel lonely now, after having had so large a family."

"Yes, sir," she answered, "I do feel it lonesome. I have brought up a large family, and here I am now living alone. And I misses 'em, and I wants 'em; but I misses 'em more than I wants 'em."—Youth's Companion.

Living on Credit.

The English system of giving long credits is gradually getting a foothold in New York. There are a great many sons of rich parents in that city, who are perfectly responsible and who will be abundantly able to pay their bills when they fall into their heirlooms, but with whom ready money is a scarcity. It is an actual fact, according to the caterers, who generally know the facts about prominent young New Yorkers, that there are many men who literally live like millionaires without spending $5 cash a week. They take their meals at the club, where their cabs are also charged to their father's account. Their theatre tickets are put on the monthly account of the family at one of the big speculating stands, and all of their tailor's, bootmaker's and other bills stand over until the time comes when the younger son gets the money, which everybody knows is to be his in time.—New York Sun.

A Generous Heart.

A little Adams street boy had been extremely naughty at dinner, and had been sent away from the table just as his favorite dessert—cabinet pudding with butter sauce—was being served. About 9 o'clock that evening, as his parents were alone in the sitting room, a tear stained little face and a white robed figure appeared at the door. "Mamma," he said, between sobs, "you told me never to go to sleep when anything wrong had been done until it was all fixed right, so I came down to tell you that—that—I forgive you and papa for what you did to me at the dinner table."—Waltham Review.

TOLEDO, O., Jan. 10, 1887.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co—Gentlemen:—I have been in the general practice of medicine for most 40 years, and would say that in all my practice and experience, have never seen a preparation that I could prescribe with as much confidence of success as I can Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by you. Have prescribed it a great many times and its effect is wonderful, and would say in conclusion that I have yet to find a case of Catarrh that it would not cure, if they would take it according to directions.

Yours Truly,

The New York MAIL AND EXPRESS, the favorite American newspaper of many people of intelligent and cultivated tastes, has recently made some noteworthy improvements, materially increasing its general excellence. It is in the broadest sense

A National Newspaper,

most carefully edited, and adapted to the wants and tastes of intelligent readers throughout the entire country—North, South, East and West. It is a thoroughly clean paper, free from the corrupting, sensational and demoralizing trash, miscalled news, which defiles the pages of too many city papers.

OUR POLITICS.

We believe the Republican party to be the true instrument of the POLITICAL PROGRESS of the American people; and holding that the honest enforcement of its principles is the best guarantee of the national welfare, we shall support them with all our might; but we shall always treat opposing parties with consideration and fair play.

AGAINST THE SALOON.

The MAIL AND EXPRESS is the recognized National organ of the great Anti-Saloon Republican movement. It believes that the liquor traffic as it exists to-day in the United States is the enemy of society, a fruitful source of corruption in politics, the ally of anarchy, a school of crime, and, with its avowed purpose of seeking to corruptly control elections and legislation, is a menace to the public welfare and deserves the condemnation of all good men.

The person who left his horse at the side of the road near James Barlow's last Saturday, is a fit subject for the White Caps. By appearance the horse had been starved and then left there at the mercy of passers by, and was relieved of the agonies of starvation by death during the night. FRANKLIN FACTS.

A very serious accident occured last Wednesday night. As Mr. Tom Langton was returning home from the Farmers' club at Andrew Wilson, Jr's. he attempted to pass a team, when deceived by the snow he ran off the end of a sluice, the buggy tipped, and the whole party of ten fell to the groupd. Fortunately the horses did not become frightened, but Mrs. B. Hurry's right arm was broken above the elbow and the ball of the shoulder is very seriously injured. A much more serious affair than the break, was that Mrs. Langton sustained severe internal injuries. Mr. Langton was badly bruised and spine injured. The rest, although a good deal shaken up and bruised were not otherwise injured. At present writing Mr. and Mrs. Langton are better and Mrs. Hurry is doing as well as could be expected.

Miss Brown's school has been diminished for a few days by a number of pupils who are at home nursing their vaccinated arms.

Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Langdon are now at home on the old farm.

Mr. David Burroughs, Miss Ala and her brother Wallace B., started to drive through to Calhoun Co., last Wednesday. Miss B. pluckily intends to drive the team, while her father and brother attended the two cows which they are taking with them. Mrs. B. and the two children intend taking the train at Tipton, Feb. 5.

Mrs. James Allen has been able to attend on one occasion, the revival services at the M. E. Church.

Many of us are enjoying the advantages arising from a bran new, forty-horse power—cold.

We notice a new departure in the treatment of disease that promises to revolutionize the medicine business. It consists in the collection of the species used by noted specialists of Europe and America, and bringing them within the reach of all. For instance, the treatment pursued by special physicians who treat indigestion, stomach and liver troubles only, was obtained and preferred. The treatments of other physicians, celebrated for curing catarrh, were procured, and so on till these incomparable cures now include diseases of the lungs, kidneys, female weakness, rheumatism, nervous debility, and piles. Originated and used by specialists, being a positive cure for each disease, these preparations are the best remedies procurable. We advise all to send three two cent stamps to the Chase Medical Specialty Co., 179 West Adams St., Chicago, Ill., and receive by return mail their interesting hand book.

Saturday as we entered the store of H. H. Osgood, we were confronted with a spectacle that made our eyes bulge with wonder; it was nothing less than our worthy constable, F. F. Florence, with his eye bound up in a handkerchief; we accused him of coming out second in discharging his duties as peace maker, but he declares that "it's only the pinkeye." TECUMSEH, THURSDAY, FEB. 7.

Wait until President Harrison is inaugurated. Then Bismarck and James G. will make the fur fly.

Blaine will be Secretary of State. This seems to be settled, but beyond this the new cabinet is still in a nebulous condition.

There is some discussion as to who was the originator of the phrase, 'public office is a public trust." A little more rivalry as to who should carry it most thoroughly into effect might be beneficial.

Mrs. Harrison is going to frown down low-necked dresses when she gets into the White House, it is said. This is wrong. They need to be frowned up. It is the high hats, at church and theater, that should be frowned down.

Carl Schurz, in speaking of the necessity of reduction, said recently: "I predict, almost with certainty, that unless an essential reduction of the tariff takes place during President Harrison's administration a sweeping reaction will come at its end."

A low, but deep and powerful grumbling, has been heard at Lansing," says the Menominee Democrat. Pshaw! man, you are not used to these things. That is the way the ordinary debate always sounds to a far off novice. Just wait till the Solons tackle local option, the election laws, the tax system, the two cent railroad fare, etc., and you'll hear eloquent thunder.—Lansing Republican.

The working classes throughout this country will be glad to know that when Mrs. Croesus wants a string of pearls she will find that the duty on the article is reduced in the Senate bill. Perhaps they will also be glad to know—and perhaps not—that when plain Mrs. Moriarty must needs buy a woolen petticoat the Republican Senate bill raises the tax higher than ever.

Rich Manufacturer—"Well, how did you succeed at Castle Garden?" Secretary—"Finely. Engaged twenty Hungarians, fifteen Poles, seventeen Italians, eighteen Bulgarians, sixteen Russians, and a miscellaneous collection whose nationalities I didn't stop to ask." Rich Manufacturer—"Glorious! That will end the strike in my factory. Now take this check over to the president of the High tariff League for the Protection of American Labor."—Philadelphia Record.

The Smithville, Ga., news is in luck—Behold it; A man who subscribed to the News for three months writes: "I wish to pay for my subscription, but I'm a little short of money; so I send you a half dozen eggs. If you'll put 'em under a setting hen they'll hatch out enough chickens to pay for a year's subscription." Now, this is a new way to pay debts; but if somebody will give us a hen we will try the experiment.

"The tariff reformers," says Mr. Chauncey M. Depew, "have the devotion of the propagandists and the fire of the Crusaders." They have indeed; and Mr. Depew ought to be sufficiently familiar with history to know that these qualities are much more likely to win in the long run than all the ardor of interested selfishness, which is the main stock in trade with the high protectionists.

What do the Christian press and pulpit have to say to the action of such a man as John Wanamaker of Philadelphia, a leader in religious enterprise and acknowledged prince of Sunday-school workers, who yet contributed hundreds of thousands to the corruption fund that elected Harrison and Morton. That he did so contribute is openly stated by responsible Republican authorities. Such an example will do more to debauch the morals of the country than the intrigues of a thousand ward politicians of whom the world expects nothing better. It is such acts as these which feed the fires of infidelity. The moral sense of the unbeliever is keen enough to see that religious principles so loose in their application that they can be utterly thrown aside in the excitement of a partisan conflict are mere worthless chaff. It remains to be seen what cabinet position or other patronage plum will be the mess of pottage for which Mr. Wanamaker has sold his birthright to a heavenly inheritance.—Exchange.

Pelted with Bricks.

A Vicious Sunday Riot Met by Gotham Police.

INSPECTOR BYRNES USES THE CLUB.

And One of the Rioters s Pistol—A Car Load of Passengers Attacked with Stones—Bloody Murder in Philadelphia—A Young Girl Shot to Death by a Miscreant, Who Cuts His Own Throat after Assaulting His Wife.

NEW YORK, Feb. 4.—A riot occurred on First avenue near Thirty-ninth street yesterday afternoon during which a number of persons were injured by bricks and stones, and Officer Brennan narrowly escaped a bullet that was fired from the roof of a tenement. The trouble began with an assault by the crowd upon some cars on the Thirty-fourth street branch of the Third avenue line and some of the Forty-second street line. The streets were finally cleared by a large detachment of police under Inspectors Byrnes and Steers.

INSPECTOR BYRNES.

The avenue had been crowded all the morning with people who were in an angry mood over the strike. Some boys playing in the street about 1 o'clock rolled a truck from the curb across the car track. The solitary officer in the vicinity drove the boys away and caught one of them, whom he took to the station house. When the officer returned the crowd had increased in numbers and in viciousness. The bluecoat was received with a shower of stones. At the same time the mob seized some trucks and upset them on the track, blockading a Thirty-fourth street car. This car formed a target for stones and bricks, and its windows were quickly demolished. The passengers, among whom were some women, fled in terror.

Meantime the officer had rapped for assistance, and the Sixteenth precinct reserve was on its way to the scene. The mob was busy dragging trucks, stones, logs, and all sorts of obstructions from neighboring stone-yards, wood-yards, etc., and piling them on the tracks. Thousands of men, women, and children shouted approval from the windows and roofs of the tenements which lined the street. When the reserve came up they were pelted with missiles both from the rioters and from the people on the roofs. The police force was too small to make any impression on the mob, and more help was summoned.

Some of the passengers in the car had been hit and bruised. One old lady fainted and was cared for in a neighboring drug store. The shot which so narrowly missed Policeman Brennan crashed through the window of the car on whose the officer was riding. It went clear through the car, but fortunately no one was seated in its path. The shot seemed to come from a house, and some officers broke into the building, but could find no one on whom to fix the guilt. A big stone from a roof crushed a hole in the top of a Forty-second street car that was in the blockade. The stones were growing more plentiful and the crowd more demonstrative when a carriage containing Inspectors Byrnes and Steers dashed around a corner into the mob. The officers jumped out and began to play their clubs. At the same time two patrol wagons hurried around another corner. The men jumped out, formed into line and swept down upon the crowd. In ten minutes the avenue was clear of people, all the rioters having been driven down the side streets. The policemen remained stretched along the avenue to keep it clear.

Some men on the roof of No. 607 threw some bricks, one of which crushed the helmet of an officer. A detachment of officers raided the house, but after climbing four flights of stairs found the roof deserted. The offenders found refuge in other tenements. This ended the trouble, and except for the occasional throwing of a brick from some yard or other place of concealment at an officer, there was no further disturbance. Cars were kept running on the avenue until 7:30 p. m. There was no trouble of note on any other east side line during the day.

WAS HUNGRY FOR BLOOD.

A Miscreant Murders a Young Girl, Slashes His Wife and Kills Himself.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Feb. 4.—For several hours on Saturday night the police force of this city was mystified by the finding of the body of a beautiful young girl in a lonely spot in Kensington. She was unconscious and her life blood was slowly ebbing from a pistol shot wound in her left eye. There was no weapon to be found, and it was evident that the girl had been assassinated. She was taken to St. Mary's hospital, but when carried into the receiving ward was found to be dead. She was afterward identified as Annie Klaus, the 19-year-old daughter of Henry Klaus, a prosperous German shoe dealer at 1637 North Second street.

The mystery was afterward solved when the murder was traced to Otto Kayser, a young man who until a week ago was employed as a conductor on the Second and Third streets Passenger railway. On obtaining sufficient evidence of Kayser's guilt to warrant an arrest, Capt. Quirk, Lieut. Scott, Detective Geyer, and two special officers went to the man's house. They knocked for admission, and were alarmed by screams of murder from an upper room of the house. When Capt. Quirk burst open the door and reached the inside, Kayser's wife, with a baby in her arms and blood spurting from a gash in her neck, fell into his arms. "Go up stairs," was all she could say, and she fell back in a swoon. Lieut. Scott and Detective Geyer sprang up the stairway, and, guided by a light burning dimly in one of the rooms, found Kayser weltering on the bed with his throat cut from ear to ear. The bloody razor with which the double deed was done was lying by his side. He lived half an hour, but could not speak.

Mrs. Kayser was taken to the Episcopal hospital, and although her wounds are of a very dangerous character the surgeons hope they will be able to save her life. She is still unconscious, and no story of the second crime can be obtained from her lips.

It has been ascertained that Kayser had been paying attention to the murdered girl under an assumed name, and that he represented himself as a single man, but the reason for her murder cannot be explained, as there are no living witnesses to the crime or to their last meeting.

The friends of Mrs. Kayser say that he has been drinking heavily since his discharge, and he is supposed to have been suffering from delirium, the result of his protracted debauch. When he reached his home after shooting the girl he brandished his pistol in a threatening manner, and was only quieted when he was disarmed by a policeman who was summoned. It is believed now from what has been learned that had his pistol not been taken from him he would have murdered the whole family.

That Latest Indianapolis Thief.

INDIANAPOLIS, Feb. 4.—The frauds that have come to light so far in John E. Sullivan's case aggregate in amount over $100,000. Suits are being instituted by guardians and others against Sullivan's bondsmen. Sullivan's resignation as county clerk, bearing date Jan. 31, was filed in the governor's office Saturday. Late Saturday afternoon the board of county commissioners elected John E. Wilson, a well-known attorney, to fill the vacancy. It is said that Wilson has agreed to waive all claims to fees in excess of $5,000 annually, and to turn the balance of the income, equivalent to $10,000, over to Sullivan's bondsmen to apply on the trust funds stolen. It is now believed by the police that Sullivan has not been able to get to Canada, and they think he is in hiding in this city.

Generally Is Explained That Way.

MARYSVILLE, Ky., Feb. 4.—C. S. Leach, for several years city treasurer of this place, has not been seen since last Thursday. His mysterious absence was explained at a meeting of the city council Saturday night, when it was found that Leach's accounts showed an apparent shortage of $4,300. He has always been highly respected by the community.

Jury-Bribing in Detroit.

DETROIT, Mich., Feb. 4.—John Nicholson, who was arrested some days since charged with attempted bribery of jurors in the case of John Hughes against the Detroit & Milwaukee railway, made full confession Saturday, implicating W. W. Langdon, a prominent citizen, who is under arrest pending further investigation of the charge.

TACOMA, W. T., Feb. 4.—John R. Thomas arrived here Thursday night from Peoria, Ills., and stopped at the Central hotel. He left his trunk with all his things, saying he intended to go out and spend the night. He had $4,500 on his person, and it is thought he was murdered in a gambling place and his body made away with.

JOHN C. NEW SELECTED.

A Report That He Is To Be Secretary of the Treasury.

CHICAGO, Feb. 2.—A special to The Herald from Indianapolis says that it was stated there last night, on excellent authority, that Gen. Harrison has determined to appoint John C. New, The Journal proprietor, to the secretaryship of the treasury, and that this will give the attorney generalship to John R. Henderson, of Missouri.

Allison Not Going In.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 2.—The Evening Star has the following: "It is generally accepted that Mr. Allison is not going into the cabinet, some of Mr. Butterworth's friends, including Col. Dudley, are said to be urging Mr. Butterworth for the treasury portfolio. A number of dispatches are said to have passed between Washington City and Indianapolis on the subject yesterday. Another report at the capitol yesterday is that Senator Chandler is to be offered the navy department.

"It is positively asserted that Allison's decision of the treasury portfolio will reach Gen. Harrison some time today."

Everything Points to Blaine.

DETROIT, Feb. 2.—Mr. Blaine and Gen. Alger are close friends, and the editor of The Detroit News is a personal friend of Gen. Alger. These facts give special significance to a statement in the editorial columns of that paper yesterday to the effect that its editor has information other than the current rumors, and can positively state that Blaine will be next secretary of state.

INSANE FOR A MOMENT.

Mrs. Rawson's Plea Is Good and She Is Acquitted.

CHICAGO, Jan. 31.—The celebrated trial of Mrs. Meckie Rawson, for the attempted murder of Lawyer Whitney, whom she shot in court during divorce proceedings between herself and Banker Rawson some months since, was brought to a conclusion last night.

MAJ. WHITNEY.

The case was submitted to the jury at 5:30 p. m., and at 7 o'clock they had agreed upon a verdict. Court reconvened at 8 p. m., when the jury rendered their verdict of "not guilty," which reads as follows: "We the jury find the defendant guilty of assault, but insane and irresponsible at the time."

Thereupon the court discharged Mrs. Rawson from custody, and after thanking the jury individually, she passed from the room accompanied by her counsel and friends.

Lawyer Whitney is now in an insane asylum, to which place he was sent by a lunacy commission. His insanity was the result of the attack on him by Mrs. Rawson.

The attack on and shooting of Major Whitney was the second attempt at murder which this case resulted in. Some time previous to this assault Mrs. Rawson's son, a youth of less than 20 years, walked up behind his stepfather, Banker Rawson, just as he was leaving church one Sunday, and shot him so severely that it was hardly expected that he would recover. The young man was tried and given less than two years in the county jail. The cause of these deadly assaults was the same in each case—the attempt of Rawson and Whitney to obtain evidence of Mrs. Rawson's alleged unchastity.

Death of Crown Prince Rudolph.

VIENNA, Jan. 30.—Crown Prince Rudolph suddenly died Wednesday. He was the heir apparent to the Austrian throne.

LONDON, Feb. 2.—The Pall Mall Gazette learns from a private dispatch from Vienna that Crown Prince Rudolph committed suicide in accordance with an agreement he had made with a prince of one of the highest families in Austria. The dispatch states that Prince Rudolph had seduced the prince's sister, and she told her brother of her disgrace. The latter sought out the crown prince and gave him the option of killing himself or of fighting a duel with him. Rudolph chose the former to avoid the open disgrace of the latter. The physicians after viewing the body refused to certify that the prince died of apoplexy, whereupon an exciting scene occurred. One of the physicians informed The Neue Freie Presse of the affair, hence the publication, for which the paper was confiscated.

A Sound Legal Opinion.

E. Bainbridge, Munday Esq., County Atty., Clay Co., Tex. says: "Have used Electric Bitters with most happy results. My brother also was very low with Malarial Fever and Jaundice, but was cured by timely use of this medicine. Am satisfied Electric Bitters saved his life."

Mr. D. L. Wilcoxson, of Horse Cave, Ky., adds a like testimony, saying He positively believes he would have died, had it not been for Electric Bitters.

This great remedy will ward off, as well as cure Malarial Diseases, and for all Kidney, Liver and Stomach Disorders stands unequaled. Price 50c. and $1. at A Timely Interruption.

"Mr. Speaker," began the eminent statesman from the Second district with stentorian voice and flashing eye, "if this here yeller fever was carried about from place to place, as the gentleman from Florida says it was, by somebody by the name of Mike Robe, I move, sir, that the United States guvment offer a reward of"——

But a fellow member whispered something in his ear, and the eminent statesman sat down grumblingly.—Chicago Tribune.

Poor old Justice is having a hard time in her endeavors to bring to punishment even one corrupter of the suffrage. At Indianapolis Justice is incontinently bundled out of court by Judge Woods, even though he had to reverse one of his own rulings to do it. The political necessity of protecting from impending taint the title of a Republican President-elect whose own state was carried for him by organized and unblushing bribery required that Justice should be banished.—N. When Spring Comes

This is the way a horse and a poor blanket look at the end of winter.

Why is it that of two horse blankets which look and feel equally well one won't wear at all, and the other wears well?

This 5A Trade Mark shows why.

Horse Blankets which are strong and have a reputation are always imitated in poor qualities which look like them, but having fewer warp threads are not as strong.

Some dealers buy these poor imitations for a few cents less and by saying they are "just as good," sell them at the same price as the strong blankets to parties who do not know the difference.

You cannot tell whether horse blankets are strong by the look or feel, as the warp threads do not show on the face. How then are you to know?

In order that you can tell a strong blanket from a weak one, the manufacturer of 5A Horse Blankets sews the above 5A Trade Mark inside of each blanket. This is a guarantee that it is the strongest blanket made for the money and will wear well.

Many poor imitations have been sold as 5A blankets. Remember none are genuine unless the 5A Trade Mark is sewed inside.

TESTIMONIALS WORTHY OF CONFIDENCE.

My daughter Maud has used Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup and Plasters, which you so strongly recommended her to try for inflammatory rheumatism. Her limbs were badly swollen, and the poor girl was in terrible agony. In the midst of the pain we wound the Plasters about her limbs, and, as we did it the swelling was reduced and she became quiet and rested. The Syrup corrected her indigestion, cleansed the rheumatic poison from her blood, and she is now able to be around the house. Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup and Plasters are remedies of great merit. REV. TAKE THE HINT.

Whene'er an anxious group is seen
Around some monthly magazine
Or paper that is daily whirled
To every quarter of the world,
And merry peals of laughter rise
As this or that attracts the eyes
The smiling crowd, you may depend,
Above some illustrations bend
That advertise the strength and scope
And purity of IVORY SOAP.

But while they smile or praise bestow
And wonder whence ideas flow,
The fact should still be kept in mind
That people of the knowing kind
Will heed the hints or lessons laid
In rhymes and pictures thus displayed,
And let no precious moments fly
Until the IVORY SOAP they try,
And prove on garments coarse and fine,
The truth of every sketch and line.

A WORD OF WARNING.

There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

EXPERIMENT TEACHES.

"Sue," said Tom, "did you hear this?"
(Could it be he meant to trick her?)
"The concussion of a kiss
Always makes the gas flame flicker."

Then experiments they tried
In the interests of science,
And their lips, as she complied,
Soon had formed a close alliance.

After trials two or three,
Happy as a man in liquor,
"See it flicker, Sue!" said he:
Quoth the maiden, "Let it flicker."

—Judge.

A FORTUNATE FAN.

The side door of the Academy of Design was accessible during the recent Pedestal Fund loan exhibition on Monday morning, preparatory to the opening. The policeman at the door narrowly scanned every one who entered or departed, and demanded name or card.

This official afterwards remembered that an exceedingly marked man entered, apparently with no bundle about him. He was very handsome, with black eyes and prematurely gray hair, which he wore long.

"Your name, sir," said the policeman, stopping him and eyeing him keenly.

"My name, eh!" said the stranger rather angrily, "eh! Col. Beauclerc."

At this moment a lady came down stairs. She was well known to the policeman as one of the managers, and as she met the gentleman, she said cordially:

"Oh, Col. Beauclerc, I am so happy to meet you! I am tired to death! Such a scene of confusion up stairs, and we open to-night! Would you carry back this fan for me, and give it to Miss Lomax? It is quite invaluable, belongs to Mrs. McElroy, and I hope it will be put in a choice place, but I have absolutely brought it down with me—how careless! It arrived too late to be judged and catalogued, but I am determined to get it in. Would you take it up for me?"

"Certainly, Miss Mirabeau; delighted! To whom shall I give it?" said the colonel, restored to the policeman's confidence.

"To Miss Lomax; and, for worlds, do not fail, for Mrs. McElroy is already dreadfully offended because some of her exhibits were refused a place. Indeed, I believe she and Mr. Smith have had some words, and she has loaned such beautiful things that I would not have her feelings hurt for the world."

"But I do not know Miss Lomax," said the handsome colonel, admiring the fine face before him, and thinking that a workaday rig was rather becoming to Miss Mirabeau.

"Oh, you will easily find Miss Lomax," said Miss Mirabeau; "any one will tell you." So she passed on, leaving Col. Beauclerc with the fan in charge.

He ascended the stairs, and was met by a big dog at the door of an inner room. Ladies were standing at the glass cases arranging missals, others were busy hanging fans, others putting away priceless boxes, chatelaines, watches, jewelry of every age, from the mummy necklace down to the earrings of Eugenie. The artists were hanging pictures. Mrs. Wheeler was superintending the embroideries, and the miniatures from their places looked at him with their sentimental, last century smiles. It was a confusing melange.

As soon as he found the lady who seemed to be responsible for the fans, he asked for Miss Lomax.

"Miss Lomax!" said she. "I think she has just gone in to see those famous swords of Mr. Brayton Ives. Would you go in? Perhaps we can find her."

"I think I would like to look at the fans," said he.

So he stopped and chatted over the "Vernis Martins," the Spanish fans, the carved bone, and admired Mrs. Astor's collection. Then he wandered off to examine the Jade, and finally rendered up to the lady in charge his own exhibit, a small but very beautiful piece of antique jewelry.

Then he felt in his pocket and discovered the fan, the little, long, black package, which he had been instructed to leave with Miss Lomax.

"But where was Miss Lomax?" She had become invisible. "Oh, there she is now!" said the lady with whom he had spoken; "that young lady with the light hair."

And here the colonel's memory becomes hazy. He thinks now that he laid the fan down on the glass case while he went for Miss Lomax. He pursued that ignis fatuus through all the rooms. He found her in the picture gallery and told her the story of the fan.

"Oh, yes!" said she, "we have saved a place for that fan of Mrs. McElroy's. Do give it to me, for she is furious."

The colonel, suddenly frightened, felt for the fan, but could not find it in his pocket; then he remembered, or thought he remembered, that he left it on the glass case. He and Miss Lomax wandered back to the case, but the fan was gone. Just at that moment Mrs. Majoribanks came flitting by, pale and nervous.

"We have lost a lace fichu," said she, "worth ever so many thousand dollars! Oh, what shall I do?"

Miss Lomax looked at the colonel, and the colonel looked at Miss Lomax.

"Stolen! stolen!" said Miss Lomax, hysterically.

An hour was passed in inquiries and in agitated search, complicated by the feverish whisper of Miss Lomax that the irate "Mrs. McElroy was walking through the rooms looking daggers at every body."

"What if she should hear that we have lost her fan!" said two or three ladies, surrounding the colonel, and amiably dividing the guilt with him. They were all ready to excuse him and blame Emily Mirabeau. She should not have asked him to take charge of the fan! and so on.

The colonel assumed the responsibility at once.

"I alone am to blame," said he, "and if money can pay for that ac—I mean, that Spanish fan—I will pay for it."

"But she said that $10,000 would not pay for that fan," said a member of the insurance company who passed. "It is an heirloom."

The colonel groaned.

At that moment one of the executive committee passed and whispered caution. If there was a pickpocket in the building great care must be observed, and undoubtedly both the lace fichu and fan would be found. So the colonel, in in no enviable frame of mind, departed to meet Miss Mirabeau, and to communicate to her the dreadful intelligence. To his surprise she was remarkably sweet, and bore her full share of the guilt.

"I had no right, colonel, to ask you to take charge of that valuable fan. It was not stolen from you, it was stolen from me," and she looked at him very kindly.

An electric telegraph shot through the colonel from head to heel.

"By Jove!" said he to himself, "a woman with a sense of justice, and a very pretty woman, too!"

But although they had a very agreeable half hour bewailing their woes, Miss Mirabeau turned pale when she said:

"Who is to tell Mrs. McElroy?"

"We must wait a few days, to see the result of Mr. Smith's search," said the colonel. "Then, if it is really irrevocably lost, I will pay for it, if I can."

"Oh, you can't," said Miss Mirabeau. "It is an heirloom."

The colonel thought there were some looms on which nothing but despair was woven, but he looked at Miss Mirabeau.

"Let us take it calmly and go to the opening to-night."

"Oh, no!" said the careless Emily, shivering; "I can never face Mrs. McElroy until I learn the very worst."

The lace fichu was found, but the fan was not, and the colonel and Emily walked about like two suspected murderers. Their visits to the exhibition were made furtively, and like undetected criminals they shunned Mrs. McElroy. Strangely enough, that irate lady did not make any inquiries for her fan, and it was observed that she did not come to the exhibition; all of which was ominous.

Nothing is more sweet than a mutual joy. Col. Beauclerc would never have found out how charming Emily Mirabeau could be had it not been for the anxious and mysterious secret which now bound them together. They grew intimate with policemen, employed detectives, and were to be seen together in pawnshops. Wherever a stolen fan could go, there, together, did this handsome and unusual couple go. That fan must be found.

However, this was not the worst of it. The colonel came one day with a paper in his hand. His martial brow was clouded.

"Read that," said he to Miss Mirabeau, almost assuming an after-breakfast martial air. "Read that, Emily!"

She started—he had never called her "Emily" until this minute.

It was a low paper, one she had never seen before, still it was print, that was the terrible fact. The iron machinery of the patent printing press had caught up their trouble, and was to blazon it to an unsympathizing world. The paragraph read thus:

"Those conversant with a certain gay set in this city cannot have failed to hear that losses have occurred, quite unaccountably, in the most aristocratic circles, and, indeed, we fear that some of the deposits at the noted exposition have not all found their way to the glass cases. A striking looking individual, with prematurely gray hair and certain so called beauty, a great favorite with the ladies, and the possessor of a foreign name and title, is more than suspected of being little better than a thief."

"Oh, dear," said poor Emily, quite crushed, "so we have got to that!"

"Dear, did you say?" asked the colonel, "and 'we?'" and he looked volumes.

"At any rate," said she, "I can prove your innocence. Let me write to this paper and tell the whole story," and she moved to the end her desk.

"No," said he, "that would delight them too much; that would be putting on the cap."

The great exposition came to an end, and everything was sent safely home to its owner. Not a loss of any kind occurred, excepting that of Mrs. McElroy's fan. The colonel had spent no end of money to find it, but the thief remained concealed. Both he and Emily had lost flesh and color, but their faces looked as if they had found something else of greater value.

They sat hand in hand, and eye to eye, in Mrs. Majoribanks' parlor. Mrs. Majoribanks was their mutual friend and the repository of their two secrets.

"I have found a wife, if I have lost a fan," said the colonel, tenderly looking down at Emily. Just then Miss Lomax was announced.

"Ah, well," said she, "we are through with the great work—aren't you glad, Mrs. Majoribanks? How do you do, Emily? Good morning, colonel. Why, how happy you all look!"

Mrs. Majoribanks told her of the engagement, and congratulations followed freely.

"But," said Emily, "we shall not announce it until that dreadful fan is found."

"Fan found!" said Miss Lomax, "why it is found. I saw Mrs. McElroy at the party last evening, and she had it in her hand."

"What? Where? How?" said the colonel and Emily and Mrs. Majoribanks, all in a breath.

"I don't know," said Miss Lomax, who had evidently not been in the least excited or moved by the loss of Mrs. McElroy's fan, which had so agitated these two people; "I only know she had it, and was telling the usual story about its being an heirloom, and the disquisition which followed about Watteau, and the Spanish school, don't you remember? and she said, showing it to Count de Fois, 'Just to think, this fan was not considered good enough to be exhibited!'"

Now Emily and the colonel were in a new dilemma. Had Mrs. McElroy advertised for her fan, and had she recovered it through the police? If so, they were still guilty, and ought to find out what reward she had paid, and what expenses she had incurred, for which they, the careless and now happy couple, were undoubtedly responsible. The colonel breathed freer and deeper as he reflected that he had not to pay the $10,000. Mrs. Majoribanks promised to make a diplomatic visit, to ascertain, if possible, how Mrs. McElroy recovered the fan.

It was fortunate for all parties that this lady liked to talk, and that she told her story without much cross-questioning.

"Yes," said she; "yes, you were very successful. I did not think you took very good care of your things, though, on that first Monday. Why, I came along and saw my fan lying on top of a glass case, just as I had given it to Emily Mirabeau, the careless thing, and I put it in my pocket and carried it home, as I have heard that a man, and I suppose a woman, has a right to her own property wherever she finds it. Although I had loaned it to the exposition, if they did not take better care of it than that, why, well, I have nothing to say. Nobody ever inquired for the fan afterwards, so nobody missed it, I suppose."

"So long as the fan got back to you, all right, my dear Mr. McElroy," said the diplomat; "only the exposition is a loser. I consider it a very fortunate fan."

Asking For Aid.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 25.—A committee of the Board of Health of Milan township, Monroe county, called upon Gov. Luce yesterday, to ask for help to fight the ravages of the small pox. According to their report the people in that section are in a bad way. There are 19 cases of small-pox in the township; there has been one death. Two of the patients are very sick, and the disease is spreading. To make matters worse the chairman of the Board of Health has been exposed and is quarantined. The Board has built a pest house and employed five nurses at $2 per day, and now they find themselves seriously embarrassed for want of money. The Legislature passed an act in 1885 to prevent the spread of small-pox and other contagious diseases, and made an appropriation for this purpose. There is still some money in this fund, and the committee wants part of it. The act was designed especially to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from points outside the state, and the Governor is not certain that the fund can be applied to this case. He has promised to give the committee an answer this afternoon. It will be several months before the Supervisors of Monroe county meet, and hence the difficulty of getting money from that source. The relief prayed for will probably be granted by the Govetnor.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1st, 1889

Now the winter's wind, ever searching for forgotten paths, sighs and moans through the whiskers of Blain's enemies. Inside the Normandie, the man from Maine softly taps the letter from General Harrison in his inside pocket, and, nurses his triumphant wrath. He watches in the fire figures of a vigorous foreign policy, deeds that shall be in all men's mouths, and, best of all, long delayed, supreme revenge. Such things may be. The secretaryship of State is his, and the entire Cabinet bids fair to be of his selection.

Indeed if Senator Allison declines the Treasury portfolio, Mr. Blaine will be the only really great Republican in the next Cabinet. Latent calculations omit all prurient Republicans such as Sherman, Edmunds, Evarts, Depew, or even the younger men, Quay and McKinley. To save his Cabinet from the accusation of being composed of one great man and an assorted collection of small men, General Harrison must look towards Senator Allison with considerable solicitude. In the meantime, Senator Allison has his own interests to consider. A Cabinet position is a dangerous thing for a presidental candidate to accept, and Senator Allison looks forward to 1892 with fondest hopes. It was stated last night that he was in consultation with Mr. Blaine. He answers the suggestion that unless he accepts Iowa will be unrepresented in the Cabinet, by proposing the name of Mr. Clarkson.

But General Harrison demands a really thoroughly known man, in whom the people, not the politicans, of his party, have implicit confide ce. Without Senator Allison in the Treasury considerable delay may occur in securing a man. The other members of the Cabinet selected are Gen. Russell A. Alger, of Michigan, for Secretary of War, and Thomas C. Platt, of New York, and John Wanamaker of Philadelphia, who will devide the Postermaster-Generalship and the Navy portfolio between them. Mr. Platt probably getting the former where the spoils are greater. This leaves the Warner Miller party out in the cold, although that eminent oleomargarine statesman may accept the office of Commissioner of Agriculture, and thus by the organization of that bureau as a department become a Cabinet officer. A Pacific coast man will probably be Secretary of the Interior, and General Harrison will follow Mr. Cleveland's example and select his Attorney General from the South, let us hope with better results than attended his predecessor's selection.

General Alger is only a name to most people and he represents merely the wealthy men of his State. Mr. Wanamaker is like wise unknown accept as a wealthy Philadelphia advertiser. Mr. Platt represents the "boss" system as it flourishes in the great State of New York. These three men in an eminent degree, represent the politicians. Some one must represent the people of the country from Maine to Dakota, and it is no wonder that General Harrison looks with longing eyes toward Allison and cries "Save me Cassius, or I perish."

Oblivious to the prayers of certain preachers the preparations for the inaugural ball go on right merrily. The souvenir programme is the most beautiful ever issued and the most elaborate. The ticket's are also out, together with the complimentary invitations. Eighty-five invitations were issued to the last inaugural ball, but it is supposed that even fewer will be issued this year. The pressure for places in the inaugural procession is simply astonishing. Of course the attendance of the general public from near by cities like New York and Philadelphia will be greatly regulated by the weather. If it give prospect on March 3rd. of being fine the next day, even the concentrated railroad facilities will be unequal to the task of carrying all the people from central points in the East. On the 3d. trains will leave new York for Washington every quarter hour, an it is probable that these trains if made into one solid stream would cover seventy-five miles of track. Thus a feeble idea of the immensity of the prospective crowd may be gained. Mr. Bayard is making a desperate effort to lay the entire blame of the Samoan affair upon the shoulders of Consuls Sewall and Blacklock, but he is now so hopelessly involved in contradictory statements that whatever he might say on the subject could carry very little weight. Poor Mr. Bayard. The least clerk in thy office, annoyed by debt and in fear of discharge, having to face a host of angry creditors, is more happy and more beloved than thou.

THE INTER-STATE COMMERCE LAW.

In an interview which appeared recently in a Chicago paper, Judge Cooley expressed his opinion quite emphatically in regard to the necessity of the law. He said that the willful violations of the law and the illegal and illegimate means resorted to by railroad officials to secure advantages over each other revealed by the investigation made by himself and Commissioner Morrison were much worse than any member of the commission had supposed. The revelations of crookedness were simply astounding, and evidence had come into the possession of the commissioners that would warrant criminal prosecutions against several railroad officials. And the worst feature was that every official they examined admitted the facts, but said he had to do it because others were doing it. Some of them even went so far as to justify their illegal action on the ground that the law was oppressive and unjust.

If the railroads thought that the commission would rest with the admonition given them at Tuesday's mass meeting of general managers, Mr. Cooley said they were greatly mistaken. That was done simply as a warning, to give them an opportunity to rectify the evils complained of without further delay and to bring them to a realization of the fact that the law must be enforced. The commission, he said, will act promptly hereafter in every case of violation of the law that comes to its notice and guilty parties will be punished to the full extent of the law. The commission cannot afford to have the law made odious by permitting its willful violation.

GEN. JAMES E. PITTMAN.

Under the heading "Our Generals," the Detroit Evening News has the following which will be read with pleasure by many friends hereabouts of the gallant soldier mentioned:

"Gen. James E. Pittman felt the military spirit stiring within him while yet a lad living in Tecumseh, Lenawee county, Mich., and before he was 17 he joined the Adrian Guards, an independent company. A year or so later, in 1843, he came to Detroit, and in 1844 joined the old, Brady Guard, the crack company of the state. In September, 1847, he was 21 years old, and in October he enlisted in a regiment being organized for the Mexican war.

"The regiment left December 24, '47, young Pittman being appointed Adjutant, and was sent, under Gen. Bankhead, to guard Orizaba. As the armistice was declared a few months later the regiment saw no fighting, except with guerillas, and was back home in July, '48.

"Shortly after Gen. Brady, the father of the Brady Guard, died. An imposing military funeral was held, Captain, afterward General U. S. Grant being Adjutant of the day. After the funeral the Guard marched to the armery and disbanded. It was succeeded by the Grayson Guard, and it later by the Detroit Light Guards.

"Young Pittman passed from private to Corporal, then to Sergeant, and in November, 1855, was commissioned Second Lieutenant of the Guard by Gov. Kingsley S. Bingham. In January, '58, he became First Lieutenant and the next year was made Captain of one of the companies, Col. H. L. Chipman, now retired, being Captain of the other.

"On the breaking out of the war but one regiment was asked for from Michigan for the three months service, but so confident was Gov. Blair and others that the war would be a long one that the Governor established a school of instruction at Fort Wayne, selected Capt. Pittman for one of the instructors. Three skeleton regiments were organized, and the officers drilled in all their duties, so that when the time came these officers took out the best equipped regiments that left the state. May 1, 1861, Gov. Blair made Capt. Pittman State Paymaster with the rank of Colonel. Soon after Col. Pittman drew the last gold from the state Treasury, nearly $100,000, and went to Washington to pay off the Michigan troops, afterwards getting the money back from the United States.

"He served as paymaster, organizer of regiments, and instructor of officers till March 25, '63, when Gov. Blair appointed him inspector general, with the rank of brigadier general. In this position he visited the troops, usually with the Governor, at Cincinnati, St. Louis, Murfreesboro, Washington and other points, and at the close of the war attended the general review at Washington with Gov. Crapo, who had succeeded Gov. Blair."

A spring medicine is needed by everyone. Winter food, largely consisting of salt meat and animal fats, causes the liver to become disordered and the blood impure, hence the necessity of a cleansing medicine. The best is Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

"Never give up the ship," cried Lawrence. He saved the ship, and he was at once a hero. So we say:—Never give up your life when attacked by dyspepsia until you have tried Laxador.

CHICAGO, ILL.

For the encouragement of improved methods of Dairying. Information upon all matters relating to the manufacture of butter and cheese and handling of milk will be given in answer to questions mailed to the Bureau at above address.

IT PAYS.

Mr. H. D. Sherman, in his short letter in the issue of Dairy Column, Dec. 29, makes this remark—"Many producers of milk and butter do not take a dairy paper, and to this class of farmers the articles furnished by the "Bureau" cannot fail to be of much value. While casting about for a topic on which to write a few lines for the "column," this remark struck me very forcibly. It is almost impossible to measure the distance between a dairyman who has kept himself well abreast of the progress in the dairy world by reading the best thought and practice as gathered from dairy journals of the most successful dairymen, and the old time farmer with his half-a-dozen cows who has never read standard dairy works or papers. If it is the fact—which we fear it is—that there are a great many farmers who make more or less something of a specialty of dairying, who have as yet taken no special dairy paper, there is indeed very great need to use the local press for dairy reading.

A great work is to be done. It has been for years the great desire and ambition of the writer to see our farmers rise to a higher plane financially, socially and intellectually.

This can only be done by having a better return for labor—the labor I mean of and on the farm. This better return is to come not so much by better prices for like products, but by increased products, better quality and at less cost of production.

There is no one field so open for improvements in all of these directions as in the dairy. Allow me to say too, right here, for the encouragement of any farmer who may think of either taking steps to improve his present dairy, or of making it more of a business on his farm than formerly, that there is no branch of the farm industry that is so sure in its returns, or that will be so small a drain, if any on the fertility of his farm.

On these points I am able to speak from the book of experience. In fact I know not what to write at all upon any farm topic only as I do from my life-long practical experience as a farmer.

As a rule every farmer has more or less of help in his own family—boys and girls—which can be utilized in no way so profitably as in the care of cows, calves and pigs—all prime factors in successful dairying.

No great amount of costly machinery—no great raft of men and teams to do threshing—all can be done with a few simple and cheap tools and all within the farmer's own family and means.

Then the return is always cash, and if a good article is produced, good prices are received if a fair exercise of ordinary business ability is used in seeking a market.

I have no hesitancy at all in urging the average farmer here in the West to make his plans for more or less of dairy farming. With our cheap yet fertile land, our abundant and easily produced crops, the small comparative cost of keeping the cow, with the low freight usually had on dairy products to the eastern markets, give us an advantage over our eastern dairyman we certainly ought to be sharp enough to avail of. Calling our cows our capital, I know from my own experience that we can double that capital every year by dairying. Can we do that one year with another in other branches? We know we cannot in grain raising only as we have the cows, calves and pigs to sell the grain to. But this article is already beyond the limits I had set for it. Repeating in substance what I wish to say now, viz: there is good, sure and ever increasing—as our methods improve—money, in dairying and I feel that I do good to my fellow farmers whenever I succeed in inducing them to introduce dairying as one of the main branches of farm work. I will leave for my next something about "How" to do it.

L. S. COFFIN.

Ft. Dodge, Dec. 12, 1888.

Handling the heifer goes a long way towards making a good cow. It is our practice to tie up the young things after the second, winter and make them familiar with their duties. They are carded and handled and soon like to have us stroke the udder, sit down with the milk pail and stool to go through the motions of milking. Treated in this way they show no surprise nor fear when actual milking is done. Gentle men have gentle cows.—Gabrilson.

Jas. Cheeseman, before the New England Creamery Association gave the statement that a widow lady in Maine who owned six Connecticut-bred Jerseys, produced from them in the year 1887, 2,000 pounds of butter, which she sold for $600. She has not done quite as well for 1888, having made 1,800 pounds. She has one that makes 2½ pounds per day.—"Hoard's Dairyman."

LOCAL OPTION.

It has come again, and this time to stay. The local option bill was born January 28th. It is framed upon the principle that the option, whether or not the manufacturing of and traffic in liquor shall be prohibited in any county, shall be left with the boards of supervisors of each county and not in the first instance or absolutely to a vote of the people. While the bill provides for an election on such proposition, it is mainly to get an expression of the sentiment of the people in each county, relying upon the instruction thereby implied that the board of supervisors, as the direct representatives of the people, shall comply with such expressions.

It seems that this course is the only one under the constitution to bring the matter under the local option of the people in the several localities.

The section of the constitution referred to is this:

Sec. 38 of Art. IV: The Legislature may confer upon organized townships incorporated cities and villages and upon the board of Supervisors of the several counties such powers of a local, legislative and administrative character as they may deem proper.

The county is thus made the unit of option and not the township, the latter course being deemed impracticable by the framers of the bill.

A farmer who has lived many years near Jackson says that as soon as spring comes his advice to all farmers would be to get around ready for planting at the earliest possible moment and get planting done quickly in order that harvest may be over before the hot wind that will surely follow the open winter. The Jackson county sheep breeders' and wool growers' association will hold their fifth annual meeting in the court house at Jackson, Feb. 13, 1889. All sheep breeders are urgently requested to attend this meeting, as an effort will be made to change the name to that of the Southern Michigan sheep breeders' and wool growers' association.

Postmaster Rhoades says for the last eight quarters the receipts of the office have exceeded the requirement established by the department to make a Presidential office, with a fixed salary of $1,000. He does not understand why it is not raised to the third class, but is well satisfied to let it run as at present, as his per centage is about the same as a salary and entails less work.—Blissfield Advance.

The annual meeting of the Lenawee County Agricultural society was held last week and the following officers were elected: President, G. B. Horton, Fruit Ridge; secretary, E. L. Mills, Adrian; treasurer, William B. Thompson, Adrian; executive committee, J. Bennett, of Adrian, S. M. Hamilton, of Palmyra, A. G. Hall, of Raisin, William Wiggins, of Adrian, A. D. Osborn, of Hudson, with a director from each township. The treasurer's report shows a balance of $522.28 on hand.

If you own a few foot lot, it's not so much to boast of in the way of width on the surphage, but it goes down 4,000 miles deep till you meet the man half way that owns the ground lot on the other side. Just think of it. Take my advice an' buy a few feet all round you an' 4,000 miles under you and set it out in Vick's plants an' seeds an' it'll be better than put'in' your money out at a hundred per cent. to say nothin' of the health an' the pleasure you'll get. Yes, gardenin' pays. Ask James Vick, Seedman, of Rochester, N. Y., for his circular, and see.

A little girl between two and three years old, daughter of David Voorhees, of Dover, while playing with shelled corn about nine weeks ago, swallowed some of the same. Since that time she has at times found a difficulty in breathing. Her parents brought her to the office of Dr. Nix, in this village, a few weeks after the occurrence, and the doctor told them he thought their might be a kernel of corn in the wind-pipe. Last Monday night, while sitting on her papa's lap, the little one was taken with a violent fit of coughing, and choked to death in a few moments. Drs. Abbott, Nix and Stephenson made an examination, and found, as had been feared, a large kernel of corn in the wind-pipe.—Hudson Post.

PROF. W. J. COCKER.

The Detroit Evening News publishes a likeness of Prof. W. J. Cocker, and has the following to say in commendation of his candidacy for the Regency of Michigan's University.

If there is anything lacking in the character of Prof. W. J. Cocker, of Adrian, it is "the git up and git that makes men great." He has the brains, the education, the polish, the physical presence, the good health, the money, the family and the friends to make him as much of a man in any honorable direction he might select as the Lord ever allowed to live. His time until quite recently was devoted to public education, and he has made his mark at it. Authorship, also, has claimed some of his attention, with good results, several text books from his hand being extant, which are sufficiently popular to indicate their worth, while the manuscript of a work by him on our national government is now with the Harpers, to appear as soon as practicable. All this is said to show the people what kind of a man he is who is seeking the Republican nomination for Regent of the University. Prof. Cocker wants to make the run, and his friends want him to, they having been assured that Gov. Blair will not stand for a re election. The Professor is a graduate of the University, as well as a son of the late Dr. Cocker, so that he has many reasons to be friendly to the institution. He would propably have received the nomination two years ago if Congressman Ed. Allen, or some other strong-lunged and eloquent son of destiny, had presented his name, but in the confusion attending the tail end of a state convention, the Cocker backers were drowned out by louder shouters from other sections, and somebody else took the plum. This year the delegates will probably hear something drop when the Second district is called upon to present its candidate.

THE SONGS MY MOTHER SUNG.

I hear the songs they sing today,
But never one is sweet
As those my mother sang to me
When sitting at her feet.
My thoughts go back to childhood years,
When hope and I were young,
And as of old I hear to-day
The songs my mother sung

At twilight's hour I often dream
I am a child once more;
I seek the house where I was born,
I pass the open door.
There mother rocks beside the hearth,
Her little ones among;
And life forgets its cares to hear
The songs my mother sung

O, long the grass has grown above
That loving mother's face.
But still in faithful hearts she keeps
Her old, her dear old place.
No other songs can be so sweet
As those we heard when young,
When sitting at our mother's knee—
The songs our mother sung

HOW THEY MANAGED.

"Pack up your things as soon as you please, my dear," said Mr. Chesney. "We're going to move on Saturday."

Mr. and Mrs. Chesney were a matrimonial firm—there was no question about that. Mrs. Chesney had always been a silent partner in the same.

"If ever I get married," said Elma, a bright eyed girl of 17, "I won't be put upon as mamma is!"

"Where, my dear?" asked Mrs. Chesney, with a little start.

"Into the country," said the family autocrat. "I'm tired of this city business. It costs a great deal more than it comes to. I'm told you can live at half the expense in the country.

"But," gasped his wife, "what is to become of the children's education?"

"There's a very good district school in the neighborhood, not more than a mile distant," explained her husband, "and exercise will do them good."

"And what are we to do for society?"

"Pshaw!" said Chesney. "I wouldn't give a rap for people who can't be society for themselves. There'll be the housework to do, you know—nobody keeps a girl in the country—and plenty of chores about the place for Will and Spencer. I shall keep a horse if I can get one cheap, for the station is half a mile from the place, and I've bargained for a couple of cows and some pigs."

Meanwhile, Mr. Chesney explained to his wife the various advantages which were to accrue from the promised move.

"It's unfortunate," said he, "that Elma and Rosie aren't boys. Such a lot of women folks are enough to swamp any family. Men, now, can always earn their bread. But we must try to make everybody useful in some way or other. It's so healthy, you know," added he. "And the rent won't be half of what we pay here."

"Are there any modern conveniences about the place?" timidly inquired Mrs. Chesney.

"There's a spring of excellent water about a hundred yards from the house," said her husband.

Mrs. Chesney grew pale.

"Have I got to walk a hundred yards for every drop of water I want?" said she.

"And a large rainwater hogshead under the eaves of the house," added Mr. Chesney. "And I've already got a bargain in kerosene lamps. As for candles, I am given to understand that good housekeepers make 'em themselves in the moulds. There's nothing like economy. Now, I do beg to know, Abigail," he added irritably, "what are you looking so backsalaisical about? Do you expect to sit still and fold your hands while I do all the work? Give me a woman for sheer natural laziness!"

The first sight of Mulleinstalk farm was dispiriting in the extreme. Between rock and swamp there was scarcely pasture for the two lean cows that Mr. Chesney had bought at a bargain, and the hollow backed horse which stalked about the premises like some phantom Bucephalus.

The apple trees in the orchard were three-quarters dead, and leaned sorrowfully away from the east winds, until their boughs touched the very ground; fences had all gone to ruin, and the front gate was tied up with a kemp string.

"Is this home?" said Elma, with an indescribable intonation in her voice.

"We'll get things all straightened up after awhile," said Mr. Chesney, bustling to drive away the pigs, which had broken out of their pen and were squealing dismally under the window.

Mrs. Chesney cried herself to sleep that night, and awakened the next morning with every bone instinct with shooting pains.

"And no wonder," said Spencer; "there's a foot of water in the cellar."

"We must have it drained," said Mr. Chesney, with an uneasy look; "but there's plenty of things to do first."

And now began a reign of the strictest economy. Mr. Chesney himself paid for everything with checks, and not an article came into the house or went out of it without his cognizance. New dresses were frowned upon; spring bonnets were strictly interdicted; orders were issued that old carpets should be reversed, and broken dishes repaired with cement and quicklime.

"Save, save, save! that is the chief thing," he kept repeating briskly. "Women folks can't earn; they should try their best to save."

"Boys," fluttered Rosie, "I've an idea. Mary Penn, who lives on the next farm, you know, came over to see Elma and me yesterday. Papa is earning his living; we'll earn something, too."

"I should like to know how," muttered Spencer. "I might hire out somewhere if it wasn't for that wretched old horse and the pigs and the wood chopping and"——

"Oh, but there is something that won't interfere with the chores, nor with school," said cheerful little Rosie. "Just listen—all I ask of you is to listen."

And the weeks grew into months, and the red leaves eddied down into little swirls from the maple trees, and "pig killing time" came, and, with the aid of a lame, one eyed man, Mr. Chesney laid down his own stock of pork and sausages, with the sense of being triumphantly economical.

The family had left off complaining now. Apparently, they were resigned to their doom. But there were some things that Mr. Chesney could not explain at all.

A new rug brightened up the dismal hues of the parlor carpet; Rosie had a crimson merino dress, trimmed with black velvet bars; Elma's fall jacket was edged with substantial black fur; and—grand climax of extravagance—Mrs. Chesney had a new shawl in place of the old garment which had been her mother's before her.

He looked at the housekeeping books with renewed vigilance; he consulted the stubs of his check book with a glance that nothing could escape.

"I—don't—know—how—they—manage it," said he, scratching his nose with the lead pencil that he always carried. "I hate mysteries, and I mean to be at the bottom of this before I am an hour older."

"Abigail," said he, "how is this? I've given you no money; you've long left off asking for money. How have you managed to smarten yourself and the children, up so? I won't be cheated by my own wife."

Elma set down the pitcher which she was wiping, and came and stood before her father with glittering eyes and cheeks stained with crimson, like a flag of battle.

"Papa," she said, "you must not speak to mamma so. Mamma would not cheat you nor nobody else. It's money we've earned ourselves."

Mr. Chesney stared at the girl with incredulous eyes.

"And if you don't believe it, come and see how," said Elma, flinging down her towel. "Mary Penn showed us. She told us everything, and gave us the first swarm of bees. There are fourteen swarms down under the south wall. Spencer sold the honey for us. And we planted all the nice flowers that grow down in the meadow, that you said was too stony and barren even for the sheep to pasture upon; and Will dug and hoed around them after the chores were all done, and we sent boxes and bouquets of lilies and verbenas to the city every day by Mr. Penn's wagon. And we gathered wild strawberries before the sun was up, and got cherries out of the old lane. And the money is all ours—every cent of it."

"Honey, eh?" said Mr. Chesney, staring at the row of hives, for Elma had dragged him out into the November moonlight to the scene of action. "Well, I've seen these many a time, but I always s'posed they belonged to Squire Penn's folks. And flowers and wild berries! Didn't think there was so much money in 'em. Guess I'll try the business myself next year. Queer that the women folks should have got the start of me."

After that he regarded his family with more respect. The mere fact that they could earn money had elevated them immensely in his sight.

But when spring came he lost his able coadjutor. Miss Elma incidentally announced to him one day that she was going to be married to Walter Penn the next week.

"And mamma is coming to live with us," added Elma. "She can't stand the damp house and this hard work any longer."

But Mrs. Chesney did not go to the Penn farm. Mr. Chesney hired a stout serving maid and laid drain pipes under the kitchen steep. If his wife really understood her business so well it was worth while to keep her well and active, he considered.

"I couldn't leave papa, you know," said Mrs. Chesney to Elma. "He means well, and now that Rosetta Bagel is coming here, and the kitchen is very, we shall get along nicely. I mean to go back to the city for anything now."

"Nor I either," said Elma. "And mamma, I shall always keep the bees and hives under the holly trees, for it was there that Walter asked me to be his wife."

Mrs. Chesney tearfully kissed her daughter. She, too, had been happy once, and had her dreams. It was to be hoped that Walter Penn was made of different metal from George Chesney.—Woman's Magazine.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in lining membranes of the nos and eustachin tubes. Micro-copic research, however, has proven this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanentally cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. OUR NATIONAL LAW-MAKERS.

What They Are Doing for the Country's Good—Bills Passed, Etc.

WASHINGTON CITY, Jan. 30.—A bill was introduced in the senate yesterday to increase the pension for the loss of one hand or foot—the same bill has been reported favorably to the house. An amendment to the sundry civil bill was favorably reported appropriating $40,000 for an equestrian statue of Gen. Sheridan. The amendment to the diplomatic bill substituting the word "ambassador" for "envoy extraordinary," etc., was agreed to. It doesn't involve an increase of salary. When the amendments relating to Samoa were reached the senate went into secret session to consider the question whether these amendments should be discussed in executive session, and it was decided in the negative by a close but non-partisan vote, and the doors being reopened Sherman made a statement of the situation, past and present, in Samoa, and at its conclusion the senate adjourned.

Among the favorable reports presented to the house yesterday was one on the bill to require railways to carry the mail on the government's terms; it provides a fine of $1,000 per day for each day the road refuses to do so. A petition of 13,000 citizens of Utah against statehood was presented. The sundry civil bill was resumed and a number of amendments of no general interest adopted. The paragraph relating to the publication of the war records was amended to require a thorough revision by competent officials, and an amendment authorizing the secret service force to look after "green goods" men was also adopted. The bill was then passed, and at 4:40 the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Jan. 31.—A resolution was agreed to by the senate yesterday calling on the treasury for a statement of the amount of the Union and Central Pacific railways sinking fund under the Thurman act. Plumb's credentials as senator were received and filed. The diplomatic bill again came up and Dolph spoke on the Samoan question. He favored insisting that Germany should restore the status quo, and did not see any objection to an American protectorate. Reagan was also in favor of an "energetic" policy, and said we had been humiliated by Bismarck. He wanted the treaty amended so as to call for the recognition of American rights and the preservation of the independence of Samoa. Pending debate the senate went into secret session on the British extradition treaty, and when the doors reopened, adjourned.

The house concurred in the proposition to supply soldiers' homes with obsolete styles of cannon for salute purposes, and then took up the Oklahoma bill, and adopted pro forma the amendment extending the homestead rights of Union soldiers over the lands involved in the bill. Other amendments were agreed to surrounding the lands with defenses against their acquisition by railways or any other persons except bona fide settlers, eliminating the clause making the lands taxable after the first installment of purchase money has been paid, and tieing up the town sites so as to prevent land syndicates from "gobbling" them. The committee then rose and reported the bill to the house, which agreed to the soldier amendment and pending further consideration the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 1.—The credentials of the new senator from Delaware, Higgins, were filed in the senate yesterday and the house amendments to the bill to increase the pension for loss of both hands were concurred in. The diplomatic bill was taken up and after a long debate Reagan's amendment to the Samoan amendment to protect the rights of American citizens and preserve the independence of Samoa, was withdrawn and the amendment agreed to. The amendment relating to the rank of the ministers to the great European powers was rejected and the bill passed. The senate then went into executive session on the British extradition treaty, and at 6:15 the doors opened and it adjourned.

Many desks in the house were ornamented with economic parcels containing petitions for a "Sunday rest" act, and when these found their way into the petition box that receptacle overflowed. After some routine business the Oklahoma bill was resumed, and the soldiers' homestead amendment agreed to. Wednesday was reconsidered and the amendment divided on a point of order. The first clause of the amendment as divided provides that nothing in the bill shall impair the right of war veterans to make homes on the public lands under the existing homestead law, and this was agreed to, but the second clause, which extended those rights over the lands involved in the bill, was rejected. The town site amendment was agreed to. A substitute offered for the whole bill by Barnes of Georgia was rejected, a reconsideration of the rejection moved, and with a motion to table the reconsideration pending the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 2.—The senate yesterday received a message from the president vetoing a pension to Mrs. Ellen Land, and Platt announced that he proposed to make a speech on the subject. The house amendments to the Dakota bill were non-concurred in. Saulsbury offered a resolution instructing the foreign affairs committee to inquire into the Samoan affair and report what measures are necessary to protect our interests there and execute our obligations to the islanders—agreed to. Voorhees reported a bill appropriating $15,000 to buy an oil painting of Abraham Lincoln—calendar. Messages were received from the president containing a copy of the deed given to the United States by the Samoan government to the harbor of Pago-Pago and announcing that the German government had instructed its consul to withdraw the martial law proclamation so far as it relates to foreigners and the demand that the control of the islands be temporarily placed in the consul's hands. At 2:10 a secret session was begun which lasted until adjournment, which was taken to Monday. The subject of the executive session debate was the British extradition treaty, which was rejected.

The house agreed to the conference report on the department of agriculture bill. The Oklahoma bill was then taken up, and the motion to reconsider, which was pending at adjournment Thursday, was tabled—132 to 114. The bill was then passed—148 to 112. The private calendar was next considered, with little progress, but the bill to extend to the port of Sault Ste Marie the privilege of inland transportation in bond was agreed to, and recess to 7:30 was taken. Upon resuming twenty five private pension bills were passed, and the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 4.—The house Saturday insisted on its amendment to the territorial bill and then took up the naval appropriation bill, and after amending it by adding an appropriation of $100,000 to establishing a coaling station on the shores of the harbor of Pago-Pago, Samoan islands, passed it. The debate took in the Samoan difficulty, and McAdoo said there would have been no trouble if the United States had been possessed of a proper navy. After transacting some routine business the house adjourned.

Got the Missing Vote.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 2.—Mr. Harry Bryan, the special agent of the department of state, who was sent to Florida, for the electoral vote of that state, returned to Washington Saturday, and delivered the vote to President Pro-Tem Ingalls.

Long-Standing

Blood Diseases are cured by the persevering use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

This medicine is an Alterative, and causes a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may not be quite so rapid as in others; but, with persistence, the result is certain. Read these testimonials:—

"For two years I suffered from a severe pain in my right side, and had other troubles caused by a torpid liver and dyspepsia. After giving several medicines a fair trial without a cure, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was greatly benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Benson, 70 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more Wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor for years, and suffered terribly; and, as my brother and sister were similarly afflicted, I presume the malady is hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Tyron, (of Fernandina, Fla.,) recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continue it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have not had a blemish upon my body for the last three months."—T. E. Wiley, 146 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not notice it much at first, but it gradually grew worse until it became almost unbearable. During the latter part of this time, disorders of the stomach and liver increased my troubles. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, after faithfully continuing the use of this medicine for some months, the pain disappeared and I was completely cured."—Mrs. Augusta A. THE FIERCE DEMONIAC.

LESSON VI, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, FEB. 10.

Text of the Lesson, Mark v, 1-20—Commit Verses 18-20—Golden Text, Mark v, 19—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

(Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly, by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.)

After speaking the seven parables which are fully recorded in Matt. xiii, one of which, as given by Mark, was our lesson a week ago, He went the same day at evening into a boat to cross the sea of Galilee to the other side and as they sailed He fell asleep, but a great storm arising, they awoke Him, and with a word, "Peace, be still," He rebuked the winds and the sea, and there was a great calm. He also said to the disciples, "Why are ye so fearful? How is it that ye have no faith?" Now, if the spirit of Christ is in us, why, indeed, is it that we are so often fearful instead of peaceful, and seem to know so little of His power? The question comes to us with all the more pertinence since we have now the Holy Spirit, as they had not at that time. Is it due entirely to our lack of faith? Let each one answer.

1. "And they came over unto the other side of the sea, into the country of the Gadarenes." The ruins of the city of Gadara are about two miles in circumference; it was on the east of the sea of Galilee, sixteen miles from Tiberias, and was captured by Vespasian on the first outbreak of the war with the Jews, its inhabitants massacred and the town reduced to ashes. The most interesting remains of Gadara are its tombs, which dot the cliffs for a considerable distance round the city. (See Smith's Bible Dictionary.) The Saviour certainly knew what He was crossing the sea for, and inasmuch as this fierce demoniac seems to have been the only one directly benefited, He must have gone there to rescue him as a trophy of his power over the adversary. We do well to remember that this great enemy, the devil, is as active as ever today in seeking to destroy both souls and bodies, and that the Son of Man is the only one who can deliver from him.

2. "Immediately there met Him out of the tombs a man with an unclean spirit." The prince of the power of the air had withstood Him on the sea and now meets Him on the land, but "the Lamb shall overcome." Matthew says there were two possessed with devils who met Him; it may be that Mark and Luke speak only of the worst of the two. We have read of the unclean spirit in the synagogue who knew Jesus and cried "Let us alone;" also of others who when they saw Him fell down before Him and cried, saying, "Thou art the Son of God" (chap. i, 24; iii, 11); but this seems to be the worst case of demonism on record, and yet Jesus was victor.

3-5. Here is a description of the man, his dwelling place and his conduct.

6. "When he saw Jesus afar off, he ran and worshipped Him." The man in his affliction seems to know that here is help for him, and he runs to seek it and not in vain. Many afflicted ones who are troubled by a spirit of anger, or envy, or unrest, or lust, and are being consumed and destroyed thereby yet longing in vain to be delivered, would soon be healed and delivered if they would only run to Jesus.

7, 8. "What have I to do with Thee, Jesus, Son of the Most High God?" The man ran to Jesus, but the spirit in him cried out against Him. It is often the case, perhaps in some measure always, that when one would come to Jesus for salvation, or deliverance from besetting sin, the evil spirit within cries out against it and still says "I will not have to do with Jesus."

"I adjure Thee by God that Thou torment me not." Matt. viii, 29, says, "Art Thou come hither to torment us before the time?" They are reserved unto judgment (II Pet. ii, 4; Jude vi) and they seem to know it.

9. "My name is Legion, for we are many." A legion in the Roman army numbered, at its full complement, six thousand; the word here evidently signifies a very large number. If a legion possessed this one man, how many must there be altogether? Babylon of the last days will be full of them. (Rev. xviii, 2.)

10. "He besought Him much that He would not send them away out of the country." Luke viii, 31, says "that He would not command them to go out into the deep." Now, if by the deep they meant the Sea of Galilee, their request and after conduct would seem strange indeed; but the Revised Version helps us by translating "abyss" instead of "the deep." The word is used seven times in Revelation (Rev. ix, 1, 2, 11; xi, 7; xvii, 8; xx, 1, 3) and in Lukev iii, 31; Rom. x, 7. In the R. V. it is in all these places translated "abyss;" in the A. V. it is everywhere in Revelation "bottomless pit," and in the other two places "the deep." The request of the demons, then, was that Jesus would not shut them up in the abyss or bottomless pit.

11, 12. "All the devils besought Him, saying, Send us into the swine." They prefer a human residence to a bestial, but a bestial rather than the abyss.

13. "And forthwith Jesus gave them leave." Matt. viii, 32, says that He said unto them "Go." Luke viii, 32, says that "He suffered them." The devil and all his demons are only servants after all; they cannot move without permission, and must obey when Jesus speaks.

14. "And they that fed the swine fled and told it." They were now out of a job, and went off to tell how it came about; they told it as they went along and in the city, and they seem to have lost no time about it. When Jesus finally destroys the works of the devil, what a host there will be out of employment; but those who follow the Lamb shall serve Him day and night forever and ever.

14-17. "And they went out to see what it was that was done, and they come to Jesus." Matt. vii, 34 says that the whole city came out to meet Jesus. What a sight this is; here is a multitude of men, women and children who have for the time being left everything and gathered unto Jesus, their Creator, ready to be their Redeemer, and will surely be their Judge, but they know Him not. In the midst, at the feet of Jesus (Luke vii, 35), is the man known and feared by them all, the terror of the place; but what a change; he is sitting, and clothed and in his right mind.

18. "He that had been possessed with the devil prayed Him that he might be with Him." Only one clings to Him, this poor fellow, now in his right mind, fears to leave his benefactor; he has found a friend indeed, the like of whom he never saw, and now he would abide with Him, he would follow Him anywhere, he would be His faithful and devoted friend.

19. "Howbeit Jesus suffered him not." The demons and the Gadarenes get their requests, but this man's is denied. Learn from this that answers to prayer do not always indicate love, nor denials anger. To be one with Him and rest in His will is everything.

20. "He departed and began to publish in Decapolis, how great things Jesus had done for him." We are saved to be his witnesses, the salt of the earth, the light of the world, cities on a hill, fruit bearing branches, living epistles; and to this end He gives to each believer His Spirit.

FASHION'S EYE UPON HIM.

He loved a stately maiden
Of esthetic, cultured taste,
And promptly at her service
His loyal heart he placed.

He struggled long and nobly
Her maiden love to gain,
But she quenched his life's ambition
In words both cold and plain.

For when he stooped in rapture
Her answering words to catch,
She said his "hair was auburn
And his mustache didn't match."

—Laura W. Sheldon in Judge.

A BUSINESS VENTURE.

It was a sharp October evening, the street lamps were struggling faintly through a haze of yellow fog—the dead ailanthus blossoms rattled overhead as if the tree in front of Mrs. Medlaw's red brick house had blossomed full of little rattle boxes.

And Mrs. Medlaw had just sat down to her evening refection of toast and tea, when Polly, the little maid, who always wore green checked gingham and carpet slippers, came shuffling in.

"Please, ma'am, there's two young ladies down in the parlor as says you're their aunt."

"Oh, bother!" said Mrs. Medlaw, in a sort of soliloquy, "it's Eda and Ella. I knew they'd come on me when their father died. As if I hadn't anything else to do but to support a swarm of lazy relations. Why didn't you say I wasn't at home, Polly?"

"I would, ma'am, if I'd a-supposed they was any relations of your'n, afore I'd let 'em in," said unconscious Polly. "But they was dressed so nice and looked so clipper I thought, of course, they was real ladies!"

"And just as the tea was boiling, too," said Mrs. Medlaw. "Oh, dear me, what a world this is!"

Eda and Ella Carr were sitting, pale and black robed, in the moldy smelling little parlor, when their aunt came in. They were pretty girls, with delicate, wax white complexions, hair so dark that it gave you the impression of being black, and great, blue gray eyes.

"Well, girls," said Mrs. Medlaw, rather ungraciously, "so you've come here?"

"We had nowhere else to go, aunt?" said Eda, meekly.

"Humph!" grunted the old lady. "Take off your things. I suppose you calculate to stay all night? Well, and what are you going to work at?"

"We don't know, aunt," said Ella, trying hard not to cry.

"Well, ain't it high time you had?" said Mrs. Medlaw. "Folks can't live on air! And two great, grown up girls like you ought to be doing something to earn their salt. There's always plenty of work for willing hands. I've had to foreclose a mortgage on a little fancy store. I want to put some one in it to sell out the stock. I'll give you a fair commission on what you sell. Come, what do you say to that?"

"I am willing to try," said Ella. "Heaven knows I am anxious enough to earn my own living."

"And I, too," said Eda. "We know nothing about such a business"——

"But you can learn, I suppose," said Aunt Medlaw.

"But we can learn," said Eda, hopefully.

And in less than a week the little thread and needle store around the corner, which had presented a grim and shuttered front for some days, was reopened, and two pretty girls, dressed in black, were posted behind the counter.

Mrs. Mopson sent her two little boys to match a skein of green worsted and inquire for peppermint taffy first. The widow Hope purchased a little hosiery and three cheap pocket handkerchiefs. A small girl came to ask the time of day, and an old man bought a pair of suspenders, all within the hour, and Eda and Ella began to think they might, in time, develop into commercial characters of note.

To be sure, business waxed rather dull toward the end of the day, but just at dusk a tall, nice looking young man came in to buy a card of pearl shirt buttons. Ella took down a box, and they were quite a long time in selecting the prettiest pattern and the most appropriate size.

"I forgot one thing," said the young man after he had contracted for an eighteen cent investment. "I must have them sewed on. Could you do it?"

"I'll try," said Ella, laughing, "if you'll bring the shirts around."

So the young man brought his shirts and sat down to wait, while Ella's needle flew deftly in and out. He was in a hurry, he told her. He was foreman in the printing office of a great daily paper, and worked at night, when the rest of the world was asleep, like a bat or an owl.

In the meantime Eda was trying to suit an old lady in green spectacles, who wanted some ribbon whose color she didn't exactly know, whose width she wasn't certain about, and whose quality she had yet to make up her mind concerning. But Eda's patience, tact and good temper were inexhaustible. At last the old lady was suited, and went away rejoicing, leaning on the arm of her nephew, who had manifested extraordinary interest in the shade of drab ribbon.

"That's a nice girl, Oswald," said she. "Do you know I almost think she might suit me as a companion? She seems so very good humored! I wonder if it would do to ask her if she would like a situation?"

"I don't see why not," said Oswald Grey, thinking he never had seen softer gray eyes or prettier hair. "Shall we go back?"

"To-morrow is time enough," said Mrs. Martiguy.

On the morrow she came back.

"Didn't the ribbon suit?" asked Eda.

"Oh, yes, the ribbon was all right, but there's something else I want."

"What is that?" asked Eda, innocently.

"A companion to read to me, take care of my canaries, and play drowsy old tunes on the piano when I feel sleepy. I give $600 a year, Saturday afternoon and board. Will you come?"

Eda looked at her sister. Five hundred [illegible] a great sum for the girl who had never yet earned five for herself.

"Yes, go, Eda," said Ella; "I can manage the store by myself easily enough. And," in a whisper, "I've taken a contract to make half a dozen new shirts for Mr. Lessner, we to find the material."

"Who is Mr. Lessner?"

"Oh, the printer. I can do it at odd minutes, when there is no one in the store."

At the end of the month Eda came to report to her sister.

"Well, Eda, how do you like it?" asked Ella.

"Oh, so much! Mrs. Martiguy is queer, but she is so kind. And—and—Mr. Oswald Grey, her nephew, is very polite."

"Is he?"

"Yes," said Eda, fingering at a box of hooks and eyes; "I like him ever so much, and he likes me. To tell the truth, Ella"——

"I see," said Ella, putting her arms around her sister; "he wants you to be his companion for life, eh, Eda?"

"How did you know?" faltered dimpled Eda.

"Oh, I'm not quite a fool," said Ella. "But now I've got something to tell you. I finished Mr. Lessner's shirts, and they fitted him perfectly. He says I'm the only woman he ever knew who fitted him with shirts on the first trial. He has saved up a little property and he wants to invest it somewhere, and Aunt Medlaw wants to sell out this store. So he's going to buy it and I'm going to keep it on condition that I marry him."

"Oh, Ella!"

"Not such a very hard condition, either," said Ella. "Because he's very handsome and very pleasant, and I like him very much; in fact, I believe I'm in love with him. There, now it's all out. And I do believe, Eva, we're the two happiest girls in the world, and all through Aunt Medlaw's thread and needle store."

"Well, well," grumbled Mrs. Medlaw, "so the girls are gone, and I'm all by myself again. It is rather lonesome. They were nice girls—but the young men found it out as well as me. Young men always do find such things out."—Baltimore Daily News.

The Great File Invention.

When I lived in Chicago a queer chap invented a cheap way to make files. A bit of hot steel went into his machine and the file was made at a single blow and fell into a tank of strong mineral water to cool. Then a bare armed workman thrust in his hand and felt around and brought it up for inspection. The files thus made were a little imperfect, but were good ones, and he explained that the machine was a small experimental one and could not, of course, do perfect work as a large and powerful machine would. Capitalists went around and examined the machine and saw him heat the steel in a hand forge and put it in the machine, and saw the red hot file come out and drop into the water, and they tried the file with their own hands on iron which they had brought from home and found it excellent. The only secret was the chemical water into which the files dropped, and which gave them edge. A company was formed and money was paid in freely to enable the inventor to make a set of large machines, and when that was done he disappeared. It was a fraud. He had bought good files and defaced them a little, and stocked his tank with them. His machine stamped the bit of steel into file shape, and it dropped into the water with the files, and his workman, who was in collusion, felt around and brought up a file instead of the steel.—Cor. Portland Argus.

An Old Musket's Charge.

Noah Stropp, a 13-year-old white boy, was killed at his father's home on Lepage street. The manner of his death is most unusual. All the rear portion of his skull was blown away by a charge of water fired from an old army musket, a relic of the war. The boy and his sister, younger than himself, were playing together in the kitchen. Securing an old musket, which had not been fired for twenty-seven years, he unscrewed the barrel from the stock, filled the barrel with water and placed the breech end in the fire of the stove. Calling his little sister to "come and hear the water in the barrel boil," he leaned over and placed his ear to the muzzle of the weapon. As he did so the explosion occurred, and the boy was instantly killed, being blown several feet away and having his head nearly carried off. The barrel of the musket contained a charge which had been placed in it during the war. The boy was not aware of this, and was merely in search of fun.—New Orleans Cor. Cincinnati Enquirer.

Luck of the Rabbit's Foot.

Congressman Dougherty, of Florida, is an earnest believer in the rabbit foot. He says that when he was first nominated there was great opposition to him. One day during his campaign he was training a lot of young hounds and they scared up a rabbit which ran into a burying ground and disappeared under a tombstone. When he went home he mentioned the circumstances, and his friends decided that he must have that rabbit. Some of them were so superstitious that they vowed they would not vote for him unless that rabbit was caught. The moon was shining brightly, and a party went out one night and caught the rabbit. One of the feet was cut off and mounted, and Mr. Dougherty says he carried it and was elected in spite of the odds against him.—New York World.

The Ways of Lawyers.

The Boston Journal relates a good story of a prominent legal firm in that city, which does a great deal of business for a rich mercantile concern. It lately rendered a bill which the senior partner of the mercantile establishment (who was accustomed to liberal charges) thought was too high. He, therefore, took the bill to the law firm and asked the chief to look it over and see if it was all right. The account was subsequently returned with $10 added for "advice as to the reasonableness of the bill."

WHAT ON EARTH

Is the reason people will not, can not, or do not see any difference in cheap nostrums put up by Cheap John houses or irresponsible parties at enormous profits, rather than take a medicine of world wide reputation and one that is giving universal satisfaction at equal price? No medicine in the world is giving such unparalleled satisfaction for purifying the blood as BEGGS' BLOOD PURIFIER & BLOOD MAKER, and every bottle that does not do its work will cost you nothing.

Michigan Legislature.

LANSING, Mich., Jan. 29.—Notice of a bill was given fixing the liquor tax at $800 per year for both beer and whisky. The present tax is $500 for beer and $500 for whisky. The bill makes the wholesale and retail tax $1,000. A bill has been introduced providing that all the real and personal estate possessed by a man at the time of marriage, except a homestead, shall remain his sole property and may be sold or bargained away as though the man was unmarried.

LANSING, Mich., Jan. 30.—A bill was presented in the house yesterday to increase the tax paid by express companies from 1 per cent. to 3 per cent. of their gross earnings. The bill to compel sleeping-car companies to raise the upper berth unless occupied was defeated promptly. Connor, with grim sarcasm, advised that the scope of the bill be extended so as to prescribe the quality of blankets to be furnished by the company, the fee to be paid the porter, and to compel the company to furnish its patrons with castile soap. State Senator L. G. Palmer was recommended by the senate for United States district attorney for the western district of Michigan. A local opion bill was introduced in the house.

LANSING, Mich., Jan. 31.—The Michigan legislature spent nearly the entire afternoon yesterday in joint memorial services in honor of Lieutenant Governor MacDonald. Joint resolutions deploring his death were adopted. Governor Luce delivered a eulogy, as did also Justice Sherwood, and others. In the house a garnishee bill was passed, and a bill was introduced to regulate the hours of labor on street railways. It makes ten hours in any twelve a day's work. Two important corporation measures were presented, one to regulate the rental price of telephones, modeled after the Indiana law, and the other to tax railroad companies upon their real and personal property, the same as individuals, in place of the specific tax paid now.

LANSING, Mich., Feb. 1.—Both houses of the legislature adjourned last night to Feb 12 to enable committees to visit the various state institutions. In the senate bills were noticed prohibiting foreign trust and security companies from establishing agencies in Michigan; regulating charges on parlor and sleeping cars, and limiting the amount of real estate that corporations may hold. A memorial asking legislation against adulteration of food was presented. A bill for a bounty on wolf scalps and one to tax railways 3 to 4 per cent. on their net earnings were introduced in the house.

GETTING VERY ANXIOUS.

Oklahoma Boomers Want Immediate Possession—Joy Over the Bill's Passage.

WICHITA, Kan., Feb. 2.—The news of the passage of the Oklahoma bill by the house of representatives caused considerable joy here. Pawnee Bill, who is at Hunnewell, on the territory line organizing for the invasion, was communicated with by Harry Hill, the originator of the raid, and urged to use his influence to restrain the "boomers" from any aggressive movement at present. This was the outcome of a special from friends of the movement in Washington, saying that the invasion might prove a formidable impediment to the opening of the country. Later in the afternoon Hill received the following dispatch from Pawnee Bill: "Town full of 'boomers.' For heaven's save come down at once. Settlers wild and I can do nothing with them." This was supplemented later by a still more urgent telephone message. Hill and some friends have left, having procured relays of horses along the road.

ARKANSAS CITY, Kan., Feb. 4.—There was great rejoicing in this city Friday when the news was received that Springer's Oklahoma bill had passed the lower branch of congress. Pawnee Bill and many of his followers are now here, where they expect to remain until the last legal barriers are removed. Then they will peaceably take up their march to Oklahoma.

A BIG ENTERPRISE.

A New Amusement Hall to Occupy the Site of the Madison Square Garden.

NEW YORK, Feb. 2.—The stockholders of the Madison Square Garden property Friday determined on demolishing the present structure beginning on May 1. Upon the site will be erected an amusement hall, a block in dimensions. A large amphitheater will occupy the ground floor, and on the second floor at the Madison avenue corner space will be reserved for a mammoth concert hall. The remainder of the building will be fitted up for meeting-rooms and offices. The new building, it is expected, will be ready for occupancy before Jan. 1, next. It will cost nearly $1,000,000.

To Protest Against the Mills Bill.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Feb. 2.—The stockmen of western Texas have formed themselves into an association, with headquarters in this city, for the purpose of sending representatives to Washington to protest against the passage of the Mills tariff bill, so far as it affects the general stock interests of the west. A memorial was prepared to congress praying that an act be passed providing for either such specific or ad valorem duty, properly graduated, on the different classes of live stock, hides, pelts, etc., imported into this country, as shall justly protect our domestic products against undue foreign competition, the impost in no case to be less than 30 per cent. of the appraised value.

The Color Line in Barber Shops.

LINCOLN, Neb., Feb. 2.—Last June a colored man entered a barber shop in this city and asked to be shaved. He was refused and had the proprietor arrested for a violation of the civil rights bill. The proprietor was fined and the case went to the district court, where the finding of the lower court was sustained. The case was then taken to the supreme court, where it was decided Friday, the court holding that barber shops can not discriminate against colored persons, except for reasons applicable alike to all persons.

A Plucky Cowboy.

HELENA, M. T., Feb. 2.—John Myers, a cowboy, had a narrow escape from death while hunting horses on Stillwater river a few days ago. His horse stumbled and threw him on rocks, where he lay for a long time unconscious, both legs being broken. Recovering he dragged himself through the snow over the steep bluffs and reached the camp after an exposure of thirty hours.

Raging Destruction

Sweeps Over a Section of Buffalo, New York.

THE FLAMES FED BY WILD WINDS.

Lick Up a Great Amount of Valuable Property in the Business Portion of the City.

The Fire Department Powerless to Stay the Furious Conflagration—Two Hotels, a Six-Story Business House and Several Other Buildings Destroyed—The Whole City Illuminated by the Ravager and the Streets Crowded with Excited People—No Loss of Life.

CHICAGO, Feb. 2.—The following telegrams were received here this morning:

BUFFALO, N. Y., Feb. 2.—3 a. m.—Fire just broke out in the large Jewett block, running from Seneca street through to Carroll street. The structure is a six-story brick block occupied by Root & Keating, large dealers in leather. The fire department has been obliged to desert an engine and hook and ladder on account of the excessive heat, and the latter is now burning in the middle of the street. The entire block is doomed and the loss will be very heavy. The entire city is as light as day, and a slight wind blowing fans the flames.

LATER.—At 3:25 a. m. the Empire Coffee mills were burning and the block doomed. The burning buildings were directly opposite the Arlington and Broezel's hotels, the latter a well-known hostelry, which was burned two years ago. The guests were leaving the hotels amid great excitement.

Jewett's new store and Sydney Holmes' candy manufactory next took fire and the Broezel house followed; then the Arlington house barn, from which the fire communicated to the rear of the Arlington hotel. The guests all fled from the Broezel house, and shortly afterward the entire building was in flames.

The flames then burst from the front of Sibley & Holmwood's great confectionery works on Seneca street. A few minutes later the lower floor of Swift & Slamback's store, three doors above Sibley's, burst into flames suddenly. The entire lower half of the two blocks bounded by Wells, Exchange, Seneca, and Ellicott streets, seemed doomed. The fire was utterly beyond the control of the department, and the telegraph wires were giving them great annoyance.

At 3:45 the wind was blowing a gale, and the fire raging fiercely. Great excitement prevailed, the streets being crowded with people. At 4 a. m. Fire Chief Fred Hornung had his hand nearly cut off at the wrist by a heavy sheet of plate-glass.

At 4:10 a. m. the two upper floors of the Jewett building were fiercely burning. The cellar being full of naptha made the situation perilous in the extreme; the Arlington house was gutted in the rear and the flames were communicating to the wholesale confectionery store of Robinson & Dick, opposite Sibley & Holmwood's, and also to the wholesale grocery of C. P. Churchill & Sons. Both of these buildings face Seneca street. The whole city fire department was at work, but owing to the blinding snowstorm and which was raging, their efforts were futile.

Besides this Sibley & Holmwood's walls had fallen, Glonber's hat manufacturing company's store had been burned, the Braezll house was being rapidly gutted, the walls of the Root & Keating leather manufactory, were partly down and the rest was momentarily expected to come down. Moffatt Bro.'s establishment on Carroll street was also in flames, and Levi & Marcuss' clothing store was burning. The chief engineer being disabled, the famous "Bob" Carlton, ex-chief engineer, was in command.

STILL LATER.—4:35 a. m.—The building occupied by the Buffalo Mattrass company, on Exchange street, is now completely gutted and has been abandoned by the firemen. Should the wind change grave fears are entertained for the safety of the Union depot, as the flames, which are now bursting from the windows of the Arlington hotel are liable to communicate to the depot. All the guests of the Arlington hotel escaped in safety.

John Strootman's shoe shore, on Carroll street, a large seven-story building, is now in flames, and from present appearances there is no possibility of saving it.

No estimate is possible at this writing of the loss.

THE LATEST.—At this hour (4:50 a. m.) it is thought the fire is under control. It is impossible as yet to give a close estimate on the loss, but there is little doubt it will be over $1,000,000.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Feb. 4.—It seems that two lives, at least, were lost in the great fire which swept over a block in this city Saturday morning. One of them was a sewing woman, who had a room on the fourth floor of the Broezel house. Her name was Pollard, and she attempted to save her clothes, when the fire cut off her escape.

About noon a number of firemen were at work in the ruins at the rear of the Arlington hotel, when the western wall of the rear extension fell without any warning. All of the men were out of the way of the falling brick and timbers but Dominick R. Marion, of engine No. 10, and John Moest, foreman of engine No. 9. Moest was struck on the head with some of the brick, receiving a bad scalp wound and being otherwise injured. Marion was instantly buried in the ruins, and, if not killed outright, his life must have been soon crushed out by the immense weight resting on him.

The following estimate is made of the losses: Root & Keating, $250,000; their tenants, $200,000; S. S. Jewett & Co., $200,000; the Broezel house, $160,000; Sibley & Holmwood, $150,000; Fowler & Sons, $80,000; S. F. Fagan, $40,000; Sidney, Shepard & Co., $50,000; the Arlington hotel, $40,000; A. T. Kerr & Co., $30,000; Strootman building and tenants, $500,000; losses on Exchange street, $75,000; losses on north side Seneca street, $200,000; other losses, $150,000. This would make a total of $2,125,000, but insurance men think it will be nearer $2,500,000. Many of the guests of the hotels lost everything they had in their rooms.

So far as can be learned the insurances on the property destroyed amount to $675,000, divided among about 100 companies in all parts of the United States and Canada.

Never Heard Of.

Farmer Homespun (on a New York Central train, to a fellow passenger)—Ever been west?

Fellow Passenger—No.

"Great country, the west."

"I've heard so."

"Tain't half appreciated yet."

"No?"

"No, sir! Greeley understood it, though. 'Go west, young man,' was what he said, and he knew what was good for a young man."

"Guess he did."

"Yes, indeedy. Now, we had a young fellow up in Chenango county, where I live. Smarter'n a whip. Could do anything. Would enter seventh, speak in the district school. But, bless ye, he hadn't no sort o' chance around there. All the good places filled."

"Why didn't he go west?"

"He did. That's what I'm gettin' at. But he didn't want to go at first. He kept hangin' round, thinkin' something would turn up, but it didn't. Folks said if he would only go west with his talent he would knock the spots off'n everything. He would be a big man, sure. So finally he went."

"It was the making of him, probably?"

"This was only two years ago, and now, sir (rising in his seat and speaking with great animation), and now, this young man who hadn't no chance in York state, where do you suppose he is?"

"I don't know."

"Well, I don't either. We haven't heard a word from him since he left."—Texas Siftings.

Advice to Contributors.

You beginners seem to write nothing but your views on politics, and your reflections on art and your theories of life, which you sometimes even think original. Editors won't have that, because their readers don't want it. Every paper has its regular staff of leader writers, and what is wanted from the outside is freshness. An editor tosses aside your column and a half about evolution, but is glad to have a paragraph saying that you saw Herbert Spencer the day before yesterday gazing solemnly for ten minutes in at a milliner's window. Fleet street at this moment is simply running with men who want to air their views about things in general. * * * Each thinks he is as original as he is profound, though they have only to meet to discover that they repeat each other. They should write of the things they have seen. Newspaper readers have an insatiable appetite for knowing how that part of the world lives with which they are not familiar. * * * Write on politics if you will, but don't merely say what you think yourself; rather tell what is the political situation in the country parts known to you.—When a Man's Single—Barrie.

The Chorus Girls' Tights.

I have referred to the frequent changes of dress required, and I am credibly informed that getting out of one pair of tights into another is no easy matter, to say nothing of the other portions of the scanty attire which have to be put off and on. To properly attire herself in a pair of silk fleshings requires no little practice and skill on the part of the wearer. The finest sort of silk tights are first gathered in the hand and drawn on over the feet like stockings, the shoes being laced on before the tights are finally drawn into place. The waistband is formed of strong webbing, so as to guard against the danger of tearing the frailer silk, and by this the tights are pulled into place and smoothed and stretched and rubbed, much as a woman rubs on a new glove, so as to cause all wrinkles to disappear. The tights are provided by the management, and the girls are to a certain extent responsible for their safe keeping.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Test for Tea.

A Russian analyst, writing to the papers, gives the following as a test by which tea can be proved to be genuine or not. Take a pinch of tea in a glass, pour upon it a little cold water and well shake it up. Pure tea will only slightly color the water, while a strong infusion is quickly got from the adulterated or painted leaf. Now boil both sorts separately, and let them stand till cool, and the difference between them will be most marked. The false tea will become still stronger after long standing, but will remain transparent. Whereas the pure tea will become muddy or milky. This last appearance arises from the tannic acid which is a natural property in pure tea, but which in artificial tea is entirely absent.—New York Telegram.

Extension of the Divorce Idea.

"Well, my little one, did you want to see me?" "Are you a lawyer?" "Yes; what is it you want?" "I want," and there was a resolute ring in her voice, "I want a divorce from my papa and mamma."—Atlanta Constitution.

PILES! PILES! PILES!

Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment is the only sure cure for Blind, Bleeding or Itching Piles ever discovered. It never fails to cure old chronic cases of long standing.

Judge Coons, Maysville, Ky., says:

"Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment cured me after years of suffering."

Judge Coffinbury, Cleveland, O., says:

"I have found by experience that Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment gives immediate and permanent relief." Sold by J. J. Orr.

I suffered from a very severe cold in my head for months and used everything recommended but could get no relief. Was advised to use Ely's Cream Balm. It has worked like magic in its cures. I am free from my cold after using the Balm one week, and I believe it is the best known. Feeling grateful for what it has done for me I send this testimonial.—Samuel J. Better Than Ever.

It did seem as though the seedsmen would did themselves last year in the line of elaborate catalogues, but here comes Vick's Floral Guide for 1889; from Rochester, N. Y., better than all previous issues. "Better" hardly expresses it—rather, we should say, far superior. It has been changed in every respect; new cuts, new type, is larger (opening like an old fashion singing book); contains three elegant lithographs (8x10½ inches) of Roses, Geraniums and Melon and Tomato; besides a very fine plate of James Vick and his three sons who now own and manage this large business. These features must make the Floral Guide valuable to their many thousands of customers in this country.

We also notice that Vick turns to the plan started by the founder of the business years ago, of offering cash prizes at the State Fairs. One would think they were a little out of their heads to offer to the public such a work as the Guide free, for that is what it amounts to, when they say it will be sent on receipt of fifteen cents, and that a certificate good for fifteen cents worth of seeds will be returned with the Guide.

MAIL AND EXPRESS

The Advocate of the Best Interests of the Home—The Enemy of the Saloon. The Friend of American Labor. The Favorite Newspaper of People of Refined Tastes Everywhere.

The New York MAIL AND EXPRESS, the favorite American newspaper of many people of intelligent and cultivated tastes, has recently made some noteworthy improvements, materially increasing its general excellence. It is in the broadest sense

A National Newspaper,

most carefully edited, and adapted to the wants and tastes of intelligent readers throughout the entire country—North, South, East and West. It is a thoroughly clean paper, free from the corrupting, sensational and demoralizing trash, miscalled news, which defiles the pages of too many city papers.

OUR POLITICS.

We believe the Republican party to be the true instrument of the POLITICAL PROGRESS of the American people; and holding that the honest enforcement of its principles is the best guarantee of the national welfare, we shall support them with all our might; but we shall always treat opposing parties with consideration and fair play.

AGAINST THE SALOON.

The MAIL AND EXPRESS is the recognized National organ of the great Anti-Saloon Republican movement. It believes that the liquor traffic as it exists to-day in the United States is the enemy of society, a fruitful source of corruption in politics, the ally of anarchy, a school of crime, and, with its avowed purpose of seeking to corruptly control elections and legislation, is a menace to the public welfare and deserves the condemnation of all good men.

Paper—Hollis Taylor and Howard McCollum.

The Question for debate is Resolved: That an officer or his widow should receive no larger pension than a private. Aff—Ed. Spaulding, G. W. Allen, Mrs. A. B. Wisner, S N. Munger, Mrs. Taylor, Luella Taylor, Wm. Witherell, Howard McCollum. Neg.—J. S. Allen, Tom. Conlin, Hollis Taylor, Mrs. Munger, L. E. Taylor, Bertha Taylor, Mrs. Witherell, A. D. Hunt.

The following selections are from The Literary Journal, edited by Sadie Taylor, July 7th, 1888:

We consider N. E. Franklin a rather desirable place of residence, where you need not go far to Semarks of prosperity. Here you may go Updikes and around Eddys without getting at all tired under the leadership of our efficient Marshalls, while the Bunting waves and Washington has his headquarters in our very midst. Here even in March you may always find good Whelan. Here abide the three Graces. The Abbot is near when we have need of his services. We have no pulpit among us but as my colored friend remarked, DePuys are plenty. The Lamkins of our flock are all that could be desired, and if we feel in need of other riches, we have but to Hunt for them. Here are Wells ready provided, in time of danger, we have but to run for our Burroughs. Let none come among us with evil intent for we have those who can Witherall such with a glance. We always have on hand a stock of Demings and there is no lack of Taylors.

Some of us are capable of carrying on two sorts of business at once, as instance, our Smith, who is also a Munger, but not by any means a scandal-monger. We have but few Paynes and would be loth to part with them. We are often Earnest, but even our most Gusty ones are mild tempered. Can you wonder if we think our Lotties' good?

I have been afflicted with catarrh for 20 years. It became chronic, and there was a constant dropping of mucous matter. It extended to my throat, causing hoarseness and great difficulty in speaking, indeed for years I was not able to speak more than thirty minutes, and often this with great difficulty. I also, to a great extent, lost the sense of hearing in the left ear, and of taste. By the use of Ely's Cream Balm all dropping of mucous has ceased and my voice and hearing has greatly improved.—Jas. W. Davidson, Attorney at Law, Monmouth, Ill.

Merit Wins.

We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refun the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. For sale by Le Caron's Cross-Examination—Fire in a Military Hospital.

LONDON, Feb. 8.—The session of the Parnell commission was resumed Friday morning. Mr. Parnell, who was present during a part of Thursday's sitting, did not appear in court Friday. Le Caron's cross-examination was continued. He said that during the last fortnight he got various documents from Mr. Anderson, an official connected with the home office, who allowed him to see all the correspondence with the department on this subject. Mr. Anderson afterward introduced Le Caron to Secretary Houston, of the Loyal Patriotic union. The witness said that for the first three years of his self-imposed employment as spy he received no pay from the government, and now he received only pay in part. Mr. Anderson had opposed his testifying before the commission, and declared that if he did so he would do it on his own responsibility. Anderson selected the documents he thought would be useful in giving evidence, but it was Houston selected those which had been read in court. "I made the first proposal to come here and testify," said Le Caron. Referring to Anderson, the witness said that the Irish brotherhood had captured and controlled the National league.

Patients in a Panic.

MADRID, Feb. 8.—A fire in the military hospital here Friday caused a panic among the patients, 400 of whom were undergoing treatment in that institution. The doctors and nurses, however, struck promptly to their posts and succeeded in removing all the inmates in safety. The governor of Madrid especially distinguished himself in the work of rescue, carrying several patients suffering from contagious diseases, to the military barracks near by. A wing of the hospital was wholly consumed before the flames were under control. No deaths among the patients resulted from the exposure to which they were subjected while being removed.

Germany and Bi-Metalism.

BERLIN, Feb. 8.—In the reichstag Thursday a resolution was moved by the bimetallists to act in concert with England for the reestablishment of the silver standard. Herr Maltzahn said that the general government had followed a waiting policy in the currency question, and the operation of the present system did not offer any ground for abandoning that course. The resolution was withdrawn.

Denies Words Attributed to Him.

DUBLIN, Feb. 8.—Father Cooney, of Dunmenway, positively denies that he uttered the words attributed to him at Skibbereen Wednesday, that the people murdered at Youghal, Middleton and Mitchelstown, were avenged at Gweedoro, and that he hoped God would strengthen the hand that killed inspector Martin.

Stole a March on the Soldiers.

DUBLIN, Feb. 8.—Thursday night while the jail at Downpatrick was guarded by soldiers and police, the jail armory was entered by unknown persons and all the carbines were stolen.

SEEMS TO BE CHICAGO STYLE.

Walter S. Bradley, a Reporter, Shoots His Wife and Himself.

CHICAGO, Feb. 6.—Walter S. Bradley shot and killed his wife and then himself at the Hotel Courtland, 1822 Adams street, Wednesday morning. Both were reporters on The Chicago Daily Globe, and well connected. Mr. Bradley and his wife came to the hotel ten days ago and occupied rooms together until several days ago, when after a quarrel Bradley left there and did not return until Wednesday morning. About 10 o'clock Mrs. Bradley received a card from her husband, and soon after met him in the parlor. A short time afterward two shots were heard. The clerk rushed to the room and saw Mrs. Bradley lying on the floor and her husband standing over her. As the clerk entered Bradley ordered him out, threatening him with the pistol. The clerk retired for assistance. Soon after and before any assistance was obtained, two more shots were heard, and when the officers reached the parlor Bradley and his wife were dead. He had shot two bullets into his brain.

Bradly was a drinking man, and had frequent quarrels with his wife lately because she refused to give him money. Last Friday night the clerk of the Courtland hotel heard a scuffle in the room occupied by the couple and when he went to the room he found Bradley choking his wife, who was lying across the bed. He was made to desist and given another room for the night. The next morning he left the hotel and was not seen again until Wednesday, when the tragedy was enacted.

THE RAILWAYS IN IOWA.

Action Taken That Will Probably Result in More Legislation.

CHICAGO, Feb. 11.—The Western roads have determined on a policy of retrenchment in the state of Iowa. In view of the adverse action of the railroad commissioners of that state the managements of the leading Iowa roads believe that there will be no injustice in very materially curtailing the railway service of that state. It is proposed to drop all unnecessary passenger trains, and all local trains will be run on slower time schedules. A large number of employes will be dropped from the pay rolls, and in every way possible the roads will attempt to reduce expenses. The theory on which these Iowa roads will hereafter be operated will be that the people of Iowa, or of any other state, are not entitled to first-class railway service unless they pay for it.

Manager Ripley, of the Burlington road, estimates the loss to the Burlington company, occasioned by the new schedule rates in Iowa, at $250,000 per month.

THE PUNCTUAL TIDES.

The punctual tides, with sullen roar,
Wash on the sea coast's pebbly door;
Dark drift and floating wrecks they strew,
Grinding the old and building new—
And building new.

So the long years, with muffled sound,
Bring tribute from the far profound;
Hoarse winds and stooping clouds go by,
And man fares hence we know not why—
We know not why.

The tides of time, they rise or fall
With that white waste that circles all;
Our years in vaster periods move,
As our poor loves in lasting Love—
In lasting Love.

MY MOTHER'S HYMN.

What an unconscionably long time seems to have elapsed since the old days on the far away homestead in the Berkshire hills! How the years have dragged themselves along, so that, although I have several more birthdays to come to me (if I live) in "the twenties," I seem to be already an old man when I think upon the farm and mother and the old meeting house and all the sweet memories of the time when I was a boy and knew nothing—absolutely nothing—of sorrow and trouble and hard knocks.

Even today when, young as I am, I have to confess myself worn and wearied, battered, bruised and broken, scarred and seared by contact with all the roughness, the rudeness, the dirt, the grime, the sin and the heartlessness of the world—even yet I bless God for the halo of goodness which has followed me in all my wanderings, from my Massachusetts home.

I was the youngest of the merry youngsters who had grown up, under our family roof tree, to youth and manhood, and was the last to break away from the comparative quiet of New England for the bustle and hurly-burly of the great west.

My two brothers were full grown men while I was still a small boy, attending our village school, and nothing could keep them at home when the gold excitement broke out in the Black Hills. After they went away my mother and father never saw them more. The next events of importance in our family were the weddings of my two sisters, following in rapid succession.

Then, more than ever, I became my mother's companion and might have remained so, perchance, to this day had not death claimed her and father for his prey within a few short weeks of each other.

Father was a good man and I always loved, honored and respected him; but to me I think, nay, I am certain, he was never as dear as mother—and I felt this more during the few short weeks that mother lingered after father's death.

How she liked to have me sit by her beside and read to her—sometimes from one of Dickens' masterpieces and sometimes from her well used Bible. How it pleased her when I would sing as a boy. I believe I had a pleasant, musical voice: one of her favorite songs or a hymn from the little brown covered hymn book! How contented she was, on the day that she passed away, to have me place my hand in hers while she whispered her farewell words. "Give me the hymn book, Rod," she said towards the last. I gave it to her and watched her as with much feebleness she tore from it one of the pages—worn so thin and much soiled by constant handling.

"Keep it, Rod, my boy; keep it always, and when you are a man read it and sing it—it is your mother's favorite hymn."

I have never parted with that torn scrap, and while I live it will never be bartered for the largest bank note in existence. Sickly sentiment, is it? Be it so; there has, God knows, been little enough of sentiment in my life, and I can afford to indulge this one soft feeling which I possess and treasure.

Ten years passed away. Amid a group of rough men assembled in a saloon in a small frontier town I was the central figure. I was arraigned as a culprit before a mock judge and a mock jury, undergoing a mock trial for stealing a man's entire outfit—coat, pants, belt, pistols and boots. I was innocent, quite innocent—but the circumstantial evidence was strong against me, and, besides, I had certainly been associating with a very "hard" set. I knew full well that the chances were greatly against a verdict of "not guilty," and I was also well aware that punishments were not graded in that locality. Sentences for all crimes were uniformly severe and execution prompt. The evidence was taken in five minutes and then the judge (a miner like the rest of us) turned to me:

"Hev you got owt to say for yesself, Rod Kimberly?"

"Only this," said I: "I am not guilty."

"Is that all?" said the judge, while a low rude laugh went around the room.

"We all thought that you was squar', Rod," went on the judge, "and we feel like giving you a fair show. Why don't you own up, now, and throw yourself on the mercy of the court?"

"Judge," I replied, giving the man his mock title, "I am square. All you boys know me," I went on, appealing to the crowd, on whose faces I failed to see much expression of sympathy. "You fellows know I don't pretend to be any great shakes, but, before God, I have never told a lie to you or any one else, and neither have I ever taken what don't belong to me. I swear I am innocent of this affair."

"Is that all?" again asked the judge.

"Yes, sir. Stay"—and I fumbled in my pocket for a scrap of paper which I kept inside my shirt. "You fellows all had mothers?"

There was a coarse, loud guffaw, while one man exclaimed:

"Thet's a reg'lar bald headed, palsied old bluff gauie, jedge, an' I guess it won't wash with this gang!"

But just then a tall, broad shouldered man—a stranger—entered the saloon. He had heard my appeal and had also heard the rough words of the miner who had last spoken.

"By the court's leave," said the new arrival, "I am an old regulator, judge, and think the young fellow ought to have his say, whatever it is."

"Good," came from the lips of the judge; "go on, my lad."

"I was going to say, judge, that I have a little scrap of paper here—not much account, certainly, to anybody but myself; but my dead mother gave it to me and I've treasured it about ten years. It isn't Scripture, but it's mighty near it, and I couldn't say anything more solemnly than what I would say with my right hand on that page torn from my mother's hymn book. Judge, I am innocent!"

"Gentlemen of the jury, what do you say? Is the prisoner guilty or not guilty?"

"Guilty!" came from a score of throats.

Now I was not greatly afraid of death, though I would have preferred to live, and anyhow did not particularly fancy death by means of a hempen rope. I felt that I was hardly prepared to die, for I had of late given very little thought to religion and to the teaching of my earlier life. So it was not any morbid and false notion of religion nor yet the promptings of fear which led me to make a last request of my prosecutors.

"Judge," I said, "I should like you to grant me a last request before you pass sentence. On this scrap of paper there is a hymn, which I have a fancy to hear sung before you begin business. Jerry Davis, there, can play and knows all the church tunes. I'd like him to play and sing this one. And, judge, ask the boys that don't want to hear it to step outside, because I shouldn't like to see them poking fun at it."

"Boys, you hear!" said the judge, and strangely enough there was absolute silence, while not a man left the room.

There was an old piano in that western saloon, used for free-and-easys, noisy concerts and occasional dances, though it is doubtful if sacred songs had ever been played upon it during its sojourn at that settlement.

Jerry Davis took the little torn page, struck a chord or two, and then commenced to sing in his rich tenor voice:

There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins,
And sinners plunged beneath that flood
Lose all their guilty stains.

The dying thief rejoiced to see
That fountain in his day;
And there may I, though vile as he,
Wash and my sins away.

Somehow Jerry Davis' voice weakened and he could not finish the hymn, which must have been familiar to many a hardened man in that strange company. As for me, I was sobbing violently—not so much moved by the words of the hymn as by the sadly sweet memories which it brought me. There was absolute silence for several minutes, when the stranger who had spoken a word in my behalf walked over to the piano where Davis sat with his fingers listlessly resting on the keyboard. He took the torn leaf, examined it critically and then walked over to me. Taking my hand in his strong grip he spoke in a loud if rather husky voice.

"Judge," he said, "I feel certain there is some mistake here, and I ask for a postponement of these proceedings for further investigation. This lad is my brother; my name is Phil Kimberly. I own the Kimberly claim over the hill, and am pretty well known along the Turtle valley."

I was indeed my oldest brother, whom I had not seen for sixteen years.

That hymn of my mother's had somehow softened the feelings of the boys, for they willingly acceded to Phil's request. Two days later I was cleared of all suspicion and became for a time the most popular man in the camp.

It is almost needless to add that I now treasure with more care than ever the little scrap of paper upon which is printed, in old style type, my mother's favorite hymn.—W. H. S. Atkinson in Detroit Free Press.

A Plot for a Play.

T. Adolphus Trollope, in a communication to Notes and Queries, propounds a knotty point that might be worked up into a subject for a drama, a farce or a comic opera. It is put in all seriousness, however, as a question of law.

A. B. goes from London to Naples, leaving his wife resident in the former city. But he, unfortunately, falls in love with a young lady at Naples; and being a wicked man, with no fear of God and little fear of the law before his eyes, he determines to deceive her by a bigamous and invalid marriage. He is accordingly married, to all appearance legally, on board an English man-of-war in the bay, in the presence of the captain, at 11 o'clock in the morning of Feb. 10—the time being unquestionably ascertained. But the wife left in London died on that same Feb. 10 at half past 10 in the morning, the time being certified beyond all question. Well, the case is clear and simple. A. B. had been a widower for half an hour when he married and could, of course, legally do so.

But, stay! When it was half past 10 in London it was twenty-three minutes past 11 in Naples. Had a telegram been dispatched instantly after the wife's death it would have reached Naples a few minutes later than twenty-three minutes past 11, and would have found A. B. a married man of over twenty minutes standing! His first wife died, in fact, twenty-three minutes subsequent to the Naples marriage, though that was authentically declared to have taken place at 11 a. m., and the wife's death was with equal certainty shown to have occurred at half past 10. Was the marriage legal and valid or bigamous and null?

Fair Inference.

Little Jeannette's mother found her one day with her face covered with jam from ear to ear.

"O Jeannette," said her mother, "what would you think if you should catch me looking like that some day?"

"I should think you'd had a awful good time, mamma," said Jeannette, her face brightening.—Youth's Companion.

Harrison and Mosby.

They Hold a Conference at the General's Home.

COMPLICATION IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Republicans Worried Over a Question of Gubernatorial Succession in the Event of the Death of Goodell. Charges Preferred Against Mrs. J. Ellen Foster by Mrs. Hobart-Morton. Dined by A. J. Drexel—Becoming Dr. Loring.

INDIANAPOLIS, Feb. 6.—The most noted arrival in this city yesterday was Col. Mosby, the ex-confederate guerrilla chieftain, who came to pay his respects to the president-elect. When asked with reference to the object of his visit, he said that he and the president-elect had been in correspondence since the election, and he was invited to stop here on his way to Washington, where he was going on some private business. "The general and I," he added, "are relatives. My grandmother and old President Harrison were first cousins, and we have always preserved the Harrison name in our family."

Mosby sent a note to Gen. Harrison asking at what hour a visit from him would be agreeable. The messenger returned in a short time to the Denison, saying that the general would see him in the evening. Immediately after supper Mosby called, and the two went into a conference.

Among other callers was C. R. Scrotten, a colored man of Brooklyn, who complained that he had received very discourteous treatment while traveling through the south some time ago. The members of Gen. Harrison's Grand Army post called last night and presented the president-elect with a handsome gold badge, made in the form of a star, with a diamond set in each of the five points. J. W. Race, of Decatur, Ills., reached the city Monday night, and called upon Gen. Harrison in company with Judge Woods.

INTERESTING POLITICAL QUESTION.

The New Hampshire Legislature Likely to Have to Decide It.

MANCHESTER, N. H., Feb. 6.—The critical illness of the Hon. D. H. Goodell, late Republican candidate for governor, occasions fears of a possible political complication in the event of his death. There was no choice by the people in the recent election, and the constitution provides that, in such a case, the senate and house shall, by a joint vote, elect one of the two persons who had the highest number of votes. The question arises whether, should Mr. Goodell die before the legislature meets in June, Mr. Ansien, the Democratic candidate, would be the only possible choice, or whether Mr. Carey, the Prohibition candidate, would be eligible. It is suggested that, in order to keep the governorship in the Republican party, the legislature, which would have no official knowledge of Mr. Goodell's death, might elect him governor, whereupon, under the constitution, the president of the senate, who is a Republican, would succeed to the gubernatorial chair.

The celebrated "Hanging Gardens of Babylon" were within the precincts of the place called "The Admiration of Mankind." RHEUMATISM.

I was cut in the wrist by a broken bottle from which I suffered extreme pain. I called a doctor, who pronounced it Sciatic rheumatism. My right side became paralyzed, leg and arm badly withered, and my joints were so stiff that there was but little action in them. About six weeks ago I began taking Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup with marvelous results. Suffice then I have laid off the crutch entirely, and only use a cane, and for the past five days I often forget it and walk without any aid. To say that it has greatly benefited me but poorly expresses my idea of your Rheumatic Syrup.

We consider Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup and Plasters remedies of great merit. Rev. J. ROBERTS,

White:—Just as soon as cold weather sets in, my hands roughen and crack. I buy the best and most expensive soap my druggist has, but the result is just the same; sore hands every winter.

Brown:—I had just the same experience, until I read one of the Ivory Soap advertisements, about too much alkali in some soaps, which draws the natural oil from the skin and leaves it dry and liable to crack, so I sent out and got a cake of Ivory Soap, and found it all the advertisement promised; my hands are soft and smooth the year round.

A WORD OF WARNING.

There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

BROKEN TOYS.

As I sit to-night in the firelight,
And dream of the long ago,
My thoughts fly back to boyhood,
And set my soul aglow;
Oh! dreams that long have vanished,
Oh! vain and fleeting joys,
Where are the hopes I cherished?
Where are my broken toys?

My broken toys—ah! Heaven,
Sadly my heart recalls
The dreams that once were dearest,
And over my soul there falls
A shadow, like mist at evening,
That drops without sound or notes,
And shuts me out forever
From dreams of my broken toys!

Yet I dream as I sit in the firelight,
Of one who was bright and fair,
With rosy lips and sweet gray eyes,
And wavy nut brown hair;
But I sit alone in the gleaming,
For the angels share her joys,
And there's naught but the memory left me
Of my love and my broken toys.

Perhaps in the far off future,
When the weary years are done,
And the grave has closed above me
'Neath some fair eternal sun,
I shall see, and know the reason
Why I missed earth's sweetest joys,
And the pitying God in Heaven
Will mend my broken toys!

WHITSUNTIDE.

Whitsuntide has always been considered by the Irish as a very fatal and unlucky time—for the people hold that fairies and evil spirits have then great power over men and cattle, both by sea and land, and work their deadly spells with malign and mysterious efficacy. Children born at Whitsuntide, it is said, are foredoomed; they will either have the evil eye, or commit a murder, or die a violent death. Water, also, is very dangerous; no one should bathe, or go a journey where a stream has to be crossed, or sail in a boat, for the risk is great of being drowned, unless, indeed, a bride steers, and then the boat is safe from harm. Great precautions are necessary, likewise, within the house; and no one should venture to light a candle without making the sign of the cross over the flame to keep off evil; and young men should be very cautious not to be out late at night, for all the dead who have been drowned in the sea round about come up and ride over the waves on white horses, and hold strange revels, and try to carry off the young men or to kill them with their fiery darts and draw them down under the sea to live with the dead forevermore. A story is told of a man named Murrey, who stayed out late fishing one Whitsuntide, quite forgetting it was the night of the death ride. But at last he neared the shore and drew up his boat to unload the fish and then make his way home with all speed. Just at the moment, however, he heard a great rush of the waves behind him, and looking round he saw a crowd of the dead on their white horses making over to the boat to seize him; and their faces were pale as the face of a corpse, but their eyes burned like fire. And they stretched out their long skeleton arms to try and lay hold of him, but he sprang at once from the boat to the shore, and then he knew he was safe, though one of them rode over close to him by the edge of the rocks, and he knew him as a friend of his own, who had been drowned the year before; and he heard the voice of the dead man calling to him through the rush of the water, saying: "Hasten hasten to your home, for the dead who are with me want you for their company, and if once a dead hand touches you, there is no help, you are lost forever. Hasten, or you will never see your home again, but be with the dead forever." Then Murrey knew that the spirit spoke the truth, and he left the boat and the fish on the beach and fled away home, and never looked back at the dead on their white horses, for his heart was filled with fear. And never again did he go out to fish at Whitsuntide, though the dead waited for him to seize him, but he came not, and lived henceforth safe from harm. At this season, also, the fairy queens make great efforts to carry off the fine stalwart young men of the country to the fairy palace in the cleft of the hills, or to lure them to their dancing grounds, where they are lulled into dreams by the sweet, subtle fairy music, and forget home and kith and kindred, and never desire to return again to their own people, or even if the spell is broken, and they are brought back by some strong infatuation, yet they are never the same; for every one knows by the dream look in their eyes that they have danced with the fairies on the hill, and been loved by one of the beautiful but fatal race, who, when they take a fancy to a handsome mortal lover, cast their spells over him with resistless power.

A case of this kind happened some years ago in the county Wexford. Two brothers, fine young fellows of the farming class, were returning home one evening in Whitsuntide from their day's holiday, when, to their surprise, as they crossed a broad, beautiful field, lit up by the red rays of the setting sun, they saw a group of girls dancing, and they were all draped in white, and their long hair fell floating over their shoulders. So lovely was the sight that the young men could not choose but stop and watch the dancers; yet, strange to say, they were all strangers; not a familiar face was among them from the whole country round. And as they looked and wondered, one of the girls left the dance, and, coming over to the younger brother, laid her hand on his arm, while she murmured softly in his ear: "Come, dance with me, Brian. I have waited long for you. Come, come!" and she drew him gently away. Then Brian flung down his stick on the ground, and taking her hand, they were soon whirling away in the dance, the handsomest pair that ever trod a measure on the green sod. Long, long they danced, till the red light passed away, and the darkness began to cover the hills, but still they danced on and on, for Brian heeded nothing save the young girl with her long hair floating on his shoulder, and the fire of whose eyes burned into his heart. At last the elder brother called to him: "Brian, come home; leave the dance; the mother will be waiting for us!" "Not yet, not yet," answered Brian; "I must finish this round. Leave me and I will follow you." So the elder brother left, and he and the mother watched and waited till midnight for Brian's return, but he never came. Then, the next morning, the brother went to see about him, searching everywhere, though in vain. And all that day to sunset and the night he searched, still no tidings could be had. No one had seen him in the dance, nor the young girls with the white dresses and the floating hair, though when the neighbors heard the story they looked very solemn and said there was no help for the doomed young man, for the fairy power was strong at Whitsuntide, and no doubt they had carried him down under the earth to the fairy palace, and he would never, never come back to his home again.

When Whitsuntide came round the elder brother set out on his search, and there, sure enough, in the very same green field, with the red sunset streaming down, was a group of young girls in their white dresses dancing to the music of the fairy pipes; and in the midst was Brian, dancing with his fairy bride, and her long yellow hair floated over his shoulder, and her eyes burned into his like coals of fire. "Come away, come away, Brian," cried the brother; "you have been dancing long enough, and the mother is at home, sad and sorrowful, and lonely, waiting for you. Come away, before the darkness falls and the night comes on." "Not yet, not yet," answered Brian; "I must finish this dance." And the fairy bride wound her beautiful white arms round him and held him fast. So the brother lost heart, for he feared to enter the circle lest the enchantment should fall on him; and he went back home to tell of his failure.

Then the mother rose up, and taking the charm which the fairy man had given her, she hung it round her neck and went forth to look for the missing son. And at last she came to the field and saw him dancing, and dancing like mad with the witch girl in his arms; and she called to him: "Come back, come back to us, Brian, darling; come back; it is your mother calls." But Brian danced on and on, and never looked at her nor heeded her. Then, for the sorrow made her brave, she went over in the very midst of the fairy dancers with their glittering eyes, and taking the spell from her neck, she flung it over Brian, and clasping his arm laid her head down on his shoulder, weeping bitterly. Then, all at once, the demon spell was broken, for a mother's tears have strange power, and he let her take his hand and draw him away from the magic circle; and the form of the fairy bride seemed to melt into the sunset, and the whole scene passed away like a mist, the music and the dancers with their floating hair, and only Brian and his mother were left in the field. Then she led him home, but he spake no word, only lay down to sleep, and so for seven days they watched by him, but still he slept. Then at the end of seven days he rose up strong and well as ever, and all the past seemed to him only as a dream. Yet, for fear of the fairies, his mother still made him wear the magic spell round his neck to keep him from harm, though in process of time a still stronger spell was woven round his life, for he married a fair young girl of the village before the next Whitsuntide, good as well as beautiful, and from that time the fairies and witches had no power over him, for a pure, true wife is the best safeguard against witchcraft and devils' wiles that a man can take to his heart as the angel of the house.—Lady Wilde in Pall Mall Gazette.

Writing on Commission.

A publisher told me the other day a bit of business experience which is mildly diverting. A young woman brought him a manuscript which, after due consideration, he expressed himself willing to publish in paper, 50 cents series, paying the usual 10 per cent. royalty. The young woman expressed herself willing to accept this offer, although she frankly said that she had hoped for better terms.

"But," she added, thoughtfully, "if it costs much to make the book, I should not think 25 cents would leave you a great deal of profit." "Twenty-five cents?" repeated the publisher, not at all understanding.

"Why," explained she, "there are five of us girls who wrote this together. Ten per cent of 50 cents is 5 cents, and five times five is twenty-five. If it takes a quarter of a dollar to pay us girls our royalty, that leaves you just the same amount."

The naivete of the proposition so amused the publisher that he declares he was tempted to leave the error unexplained. He said, however: "But, of course, you can see that we shall not lose so much as we should if there had been ten of you, for then we should have to make the book for nothing and lose the booksellers' discount beside. Really, though, I fear you will be obliged to do with a cent apiece." And his proposition was rejected with indignation, the amusing part of the story being that the lady who conducted the negotiations declared that if there were only one author, 10 per cent. would do very well, but that anybody could see that it would not amount to anything divided among five people.—Book Buyer.

The Money Order System.

It is just fifty years since the postal money order system was introduced in England. Prior to that time a similar device had been operated by private capital, but in 1838 the government took charge of the business. The rates have been gradually reduced from time to time, until now they are fixed at the very lowest figure possible. During the past year the amount of money transmitted was over £26,000,000. This plan of sending money, which has been copied in this country, is absolutely the safest method known.—San Francisco Chronicle.

A Stolen Child Recovered.

CHICAGO, Feb. 9.—Little Annie Redmond, who was abducted by a woman May 28 last, while playing on the street, was discovered in the Home for the Friendless Friday and returned to her parents. She had been living with a family named Gurley, who shamefully abused the child. She was taken from them Jan. 18 last and placed in the home, but her identity was not discovered until Friday. The Gurleys have been arrested, and state that the child was given them by another party. John Redmond, the father, became insane over his loss and was placed in the asylum some time ago. He has seen his child and will recover his reason.

St. Nicholas for 1889.

PEOPLE who have the idea that St. Nicholas Magazine is only for little children should look over the prospectus of that magazine for 1889, and they will discover that it is for children of all ages, "from five to eighty-five," as some one recently said of it. Indeed, while St. Nicholas is designed for girls and boys, it might almost be called a "family magazine," for the grown-up members of a household will find much to interest them in every number.

The editor, Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, calls the next volume an "all-round-the-world year," because it is to contain so many illustrated papers about the world in general—not dry geographical papers, but stories and sketches and tales of travel and adventure by land and sea—and all illustrated by the best artists. The features will include a serial story, "How We Made the Farthest North," by Gen. A. W. Greely, the well-known commander of the Greely Expedition; a serial about Canada, by Mrs. Catherwood, who is writing a serial story for The Century this year, "Indians of the Amazon," by Mrs. Frank R. Stockton. There are many papers about Europe, including a Christmas story of life in Norway, by H. H. Boyesen; articles on Holland and the Dutch, by Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge; "The Queen's Navy," by Lieut. F. Harrison Smith, R. N., with illustrations of many of England's finest war ships; "The Winchester School," illustrated by Joseph Pennell; "English Railway Trains," by Wm. H Rideing, etc., etc. The French papers include "Ferdinand de Lesseps and his two Ship Canals," and there are several interesting contributions on German, Italian and Russian subjects.

Under "Asia," comes "Boys and Girls in China," by Yan Phou Lee (a recent graduate of Yale); "Home Life in the East," by Mrs. Holman Hunt; and a number of papers about Japan. Under "Africa" there is a sketch of Henry M. Stanley, by Noah Brooks, and several stories about Egypt. Australia is not forgotten, nor the islands of the sea, and there are even to be stories of under the sea.

Of course the bulk of the contents will relate to American subjects, as usual. Mrs. Burnett, the author of "Little Lord Fauntleroy," contributes a story of New York called "Little Saint Elizabeth;" there will be papers describing how the government offices are conducted, papers about athletics, amateur photography, etc. The full prospectus will be sent to any one who wishes to see it, by the publishers, The Century Co., of New York.

VALUE OF BUTTERMILK AT CREAMERIES.

Having just sold one carload of 300 lb creamery fed hogs, of April farrow, I will give my experience to the readers of the BUREAU, so that all creamery men may know how it is done, and learn the true value of buttermilk when rightly fed to young healthy pigs.

My system of hog raising is this. Have pigs come in March or April, the earlier the better, keep the little fellows warm and dry, and give all the attention possible. When they are two months old, select the best sows for breeding, (if you don't want to keep your old sows,) and let them run on a good clover pasture where they will require but little milk, this will develop bone and muscle, keeping the young sows in a healthy and growing condition. The balance of the herd go into a dry yard, which should be sheltered from the sun by a few shade trees, and they should be fed for one purpose, an early market. My motto is to send them along. Care and daily attention is the price of success.

The cobs in the feed yard must be gathered and burned once a week, scattering salt on the ashes, this they will eat up clean. I give my hogs all the coal slack they will eat, and keep a supply of salt in small troughs where they can have access to it at all times. This is a sure cure for worms, and will keep the pigs' bowels in proper condition. We don't let the milk from the first churning in the morning stand till after dinner before feeding, but see the pigs get it at once, while it is fresh and sweet.

There is one important thing most creamery men have yet to learn, and that is how to build a pig trough. Now when I say a pig trough, I don't mean a bath tub. Let me describe mine. Take a two-inch plank, sixteen inches wide, and thirty feet long, spike to the sides two six inch planks, same length as above, making the trough four inches deep only. Run an inch board through the center of trough, dividing it so pigs can eat from both sides; place inch-strips from center board to sides of trough, so as to have room for the pigs to drink, but not room for filthy feet in the milk. Such a trough will never become dirty, and will save every pound of feed put into it. It is the only way to feed dry meal and have no waste.

Should milk get a little scarce in the fall of the year, and your pigs show a disposition to turn up their noses at corn, grind a load of rye, oats and corn together, throw a few bushels of the mixture into your buttermilk tank everyday, and they will eat it like a Chicago man eats oysters on the half shell.

Don't let them lose a day from any neglect. Keep them going, and sell them the first day of November, making them weigh 225 or 250 pounds. You can do it. I can, and there is not a man in America but can beat me if he tries harder than I do. Don't sell your buttermilk for twenty-five cents per barrel, but get a good breed of hogs, and you will realize thirty cents per hundred pounds for it.

Below I give results of experiments made during the season of 1888 at two of my creameries.

STATM'T OF HOGS FED AT CREAMERY NO. I.

Total number of hogs fed 109.

	Pounds.
Weighed in	18,310
Weighed out	24,350
Gain	6,040

Sold at $6 per hundred.

CORN FED.

238 bushels at 50c	$119.00
98 bushels at 25c	24 50
Total	$143 50

Buttermilk fed, 70,640 pounds, realizing 80 9-10 cents per hundred.

Statement of creamery No. 2, consisting of six months' feeding young pigs:

Weight at end of season 9,990 pounds; worth at end of experiment $6 per hundred, or	$599 40
Less value of 45 2 weeks' old pigs	45.00
Total	$554.40

Corn and oats fed during the experiment to the amount of $176.94; pounds of milk fed 135,584, realizing about 28 cents per 100 pounds.

Statement of 45 head of same lot as fed at creamery No. 2 for the month of September, 1888.

	Pounds.
September 1, weight	5,175
October 5, weight	7,695
Gain of	2,520

At $6 per hundred, $151.20.

During this time they ate three acres of green corn bought standing from neighbors at $39, and 21,628 pounds of milk, which realized 52 1-3 cents per 100 pounds.

Statement of same lot during October:

	Pounds.
October 5, weighed in	7,695
November 1, weighed out	9,990
Gain (at $6 per hundred 137.70)	2,295

Corn fed: 160 bushels at 25 cents $40 and 21,160 pounds milk, realizing 46 cents per 100 pounds.

Some people object to giving all the credit to the milk and figuring the corn at cost. But the object is not to speculate on corn or oats, but to use up the surplus buttermilk from our factories and learn its true value.

Notice the September experiment. We bought three acres of corn for $39, corn delivered at the feed yard. The pork made off of the three acres was worth with 21,628 lbs. milk $151.20. This shows us the beauty of giving a hog what he likes best. Seek to please him and he will please you. Study his taste. If he is in your way when you are walking through the yard don't give him a kick and say get out of the road you brute, but walk around him. Say good morning to him, and he will say good luck to you when he goes on the scales.

Small-Pox at Azalia Conquered.

There have been no new cases of small-pox at or about Azalia for past couple of weeks and it is now confidently believed that the progress of the deadly disease thereabouts has been stopped, and soon all traces of its presence will be thoroughly stamped out. Most of the patients have recovered and returned to their homes during the past week, some of the nurses have closed their labors and gone therefrom after first properly disinfecting themselves beyond a possibility of conveying the disease. Of the remaining patients, we understand, Dr. Schuyler is the only one requiring much care and that he is rapidly improving and is now considered sure to recover, though a week ago his condition was alarming. The population about Azalia have experienced a most trying ordeal during the past several weeks during the prevalence of the plague, and are entitled to the greatest sympathy. Since near holidays they have been isolated from mingling with people of other communities and most of the time without communication with the out side world, even the railroad trains flying through the town without stopping, and new cases of the disease coming down daily with no idea when the scourge would cease or who were to be additional victims. Imagine the feeling of the people of Azalia under such circumstances! Happily the agony is about over and soon affairs will assume their former condition. Of the score of outbreaks of the disease about Azalia only one death has occurred—this has been almost wonderful and no doubt is owing to the excellent treatment furnished by the able corpse of nurses. The committee appointed by the board of health to fight the disease, have done their work faithfully and effectually, and great credit is due to their exertions. May it be a long term of years before another such an affliction shall fall to this section.—Dundee Reporter.—

THE COURIER-JOURNAL.

The Representative Newspaper of the South-west. Largest circulation of any Democratic Newspaper in America.

It is the paper for the Farmer, the Merchant and the Family Circle. Popular and cheap. It advocates a reform of the present high tariff, and wages vigorous war on all subsidies and monopolies. It is emphatically the people's paper, and its immense circulation throughout the United States attests its power as the organ of the people.

The Weekly Courier-Journal, is the largest and best Democratic newspaper issued. It is an eight-page paper of eight columns to the page, and its sixty-four columns each week are filled with live interesting matter. It is newsy, bright and clean, and leads the American newspapers of the day. The regular subscription price is only $1 a year, and to clubs of eight yearly subscribers at one time, with eight dollars, an extra copy is sent one year to the address of the club-raiser, or to any other address desired. In other words, nine copies one year for eight dollars. The Courier-Journal is the one great newspaper, west of the Alleghenies, and south of the Potomac and the Ohio, which has the courage, the independence and the ability to stand and resist the flood-tide of monopoly sweeping over the land and to make an upright and disinterested defense of the toiling, taxpaying masses of the people. Fighting all dishonest schemes, the Courier-Journal is as a sentinel on the watch tower, sleepless and vigilant.

Subscribe for the weekly Courier-Journal and learn the truth, and join in the Peoples' Battle of Resistance.

A NEW BOOK.

Mr. Lewis McLouth of Adrian, will be in Tecumseh, Friday and Saturday of this week, to canvass for the new work, "Forging his Chains." It is a book of thrilling interest and is finding an extensive sale wherever it has been been introduced. We commend Mr. McLouth to the favorable consideration of our citizens. The following testimonial will show what good judges think of the work.

ADRIAN, Mich., Nov. 29, '88.

FRIEND LEWIS F. MCLOUTH:—You have asked me to express my opinion of Geo. Bidwell's narrative, a book entitled "Forging His Chains." I have read the same with interest and believe that any person so doing will not only be interested but instructed, especially regarding crime and penal servitude in England. The work is a stern verification of the old adage that "murder will out," and the terrible punishment meted out to Bidwell and his associates, exemplifies the fact that crime and evil doers live in an atmosphere of apprehensive doubt and are of all men the most miserable. In this it points a moral. Truly Yours.

THE TAVERNIERS.

This troupe will appear at the Opera House next Monday and Tuesday evenings. Lynwood will be presented Monday night. Of this play the Battle Creek Moon says; "Lynwood" drew the usual crowd to the Opera House last evening, and the accustomed satisfaction that appears to follow all of the Tavernier plays is freely expressed to-day. The play is based upon incidents in the late war, which are woven together in an exceedingly interesting manner, some of the situations being extremely strong Ida VanCortland was excellently adapted to the character of "Lucille Carlyle," and was ably supported throughout by the Taverniers.

On Tuesday evening the old standard play of Romeo and Juliet. Of this play the Port Huron Commercial-Tribune says: "Taken as a whole the performance of "Romeo and Juliet," by the Taverniers at the City opera house Friday night, was a genuine treat. Ida VanCortland, whose ambition and conscientious efforts to please seem to be proof against the most difficult task, essayed the exciting role of Juliet, and in her interpretation and rendering of the part treated the large audience to a delightful surprise. In many respects the Juliet of last night calls for unstinted praise and claims recognition as a piece of work of high artistic excellence. The support throughout was good, C. E. Holt especially doing some particularly fine work as Romeo, and W. J. Butler and Emma Lathrop sustaining themselves in their respective parts in a manner that calls for a special word of praise."

CLIPPINGS AND CONDENSATIONS.

Hudson has new quarters for their Knights of Phythias Lodge

Editor Allen of the Morenci Observer has been on the sick list for several days.

Rev. Dr. Satterlee of New York, was chosen bishop of this diocese at Detroit last week. His acceptance is yet uncertain.

Fishing on Devil's lake is a popular pastime at present. C. K. Spafford spent about two hours on Tuesday, and returned with a fine string of perch.—Addison Courier.

Rollinites are pleased, for the present at least. The Mackinaw has promised that they shall have a station agent in the spring. They certainly deserve it.

The White Cap craze is becoming so popular, some of the jokers may get themselves into trouble. It is thought clever amusement in some sections to send some fellow a letter who will get excited over it.—The Lance.

A petition to the legislature to have a law passed raising the tax on dogs is being circulated at Jackson and quite generally signed. The idea is to make a law that will require the supervisors to find an owner for every cur that runs the street.

A bill is under discussion at the state legislature at Lansing, to prevent young women from marrying old men for their money, by specifying that wives shall have no right to dower in their husband's property, except that acquired after their marriage.

Twenty-six carloads per day is the rate at which the C. J. & M. has been transferring Devil's lake to Cincinnati during the present week. No wonder the water is low in the mill pond here, and the fish in Bean Creek shows signs of great alarm.—Addison Courier.

Congressman Thomas of Ohio, has introduced a bill into congress, to pay farmers a bounty on wheat. He says the manufacturers are all protected, so that the farmer has to pay an extra price on all wares and tools that he buys, and he should be protected by a bounty of 20 cents per bushel on wheat, to average up matters.

President Allis, of the Adrian scientific society, warns the farmers against the bean weevil ("bruchus fabæ.") He says its introduction here means the loss of many thousand dollars to the county and necessarily to the state. Seedmen and importers are urged to special vigilance. The specimens so far affected came from the east.

"Why don't you earn some money?" asked a citizen of a half grown lad one day this week. "Get a gun and shoot dogs, and collect fifty cents apiece." "Guess not," replied the lad, "it's all a scheme; they give a fellow fifty cents to shoot a dog, and then arrest him and fine him five dollars for shooting in the corporation."—Hudson Post.

The Jackson Citizen contributes to a local craze for antiques the following specimen: Miss Ancient Maiden, residing on the shady side of Comfortable avenue, near Easy street, is the fortunate possessor of a corn cob pipe, smoked by Nero on the occasion of his violin solo during the burning of Rome. The pipe is clearly genuine as the prints of Mr. Nero's teeth can still be plainly seen upon the stem.

The Prohibitionists will be approached this spring as usual and asked not to put up township tickets. They will be invited to support the good temperance men who will be nominated by the other parties. But they should be invited to stand out of the way once themselves and give the Prohibitionists a chance. Turn about is usually considered fair play.—The Lance.

Mr. Loyster says he never saw a winter when butter was so dull on the markets as it is at present. He thinks the open winter has a great deal to do with it, as cows do much better now than they would if the thermometer was way down below zero. We might appropriately add that the consumption of buck-wheat cakes is much greater during a severe winter than they are during a mild one.—Hudson Gazette.

Girls, read this excellent advice of a contemporary. It is wholesome and may do you good: When a respectable young man desires the acquaintance of a lady, he does not stand upon the street and seek it through a flirtation. But on the other hand, the flirt of the street, no matter how innocent her intentions may be, is the last person that he would select as his life companion. He desires purity without suspicion. The girl who engages in this kind of absurdity should bear in mind that she not only endangers her reputation and puts a stain upon her name, but that her name is a by-word among those with whom she flirts, to be bandied about in the saloons, on the street corners, and in low down, unholy places in the town, fastening upon her a stigma that will cling to her for years after she has attempted to mend her ways.—Gratiot Journal.

INFLUENCE.

I dropped a pebble in the stream;
It sank forever from my sight;
A moment in the sun's warm beam
A diamond sparkled warm and bright
Reflecting far its radiant light.
A circle, small indeed at first,
Widened, e'en midst the tempest's roar,
Until at last it faintly burst
And vanished on the farther shore.

A frown, a scowl, an angry glance,
A hasty or unguarded word,
A formal bow, a look askance—
These quicker than a swift winged bird,
Pierce to the heart like two edged sword,
Spreading a baleful influence wide,
They cast a mirksome shade and gloom
Across life's rough and troubled tide,
And reach unto the silent tomb.

A word, a look of sympathy,
A penny generously bestowed,
A simple act of courtesy,
A kindly influence shed abroad,
And from the soul lift many a load—
These angel deeds, grand and sublime,
Like ripples on the restless sea,
Sweep o'er the fretful stream of time,
And reach into eternity.

—Paul Clayton.

PEDRO.

Nobody knew much about Pedro.

In fact, he was a mystery and had been for a great many years—for exactly how many years, though, nobody but Pedro himself could tell you. Certain it is that he had been a mystery since '39, for in that year the town was settled, and Pedro was living in Judge's Cliff when the first settlers came to Beachton.

How he came to be there nobody knew, and nobody would have cared had it not been for the last act of his life. Nobody knew who built his house for him; or how it came to be where it was, though as to the latter point the village solons declared simply that some terrific storm that happened long ago must have been responsible for the location. All of which rather anticipates the statement that Pedro's home was the wreck of a boat—a queer, lubberly old wreck that was lying keel uppermost full twenty feet above the water's edge. A narrow ledge, not more than ten feet wide, and running perfectly horizontal for a distance of forty or fifty feet, was all that Pedro could claim in the way of a front or back yard, and outside that limited range the old man ventured but once a week. That was on Saturday afternoon, when he would take his willow market basket on his arm and go to Beachton market.

Pedro himself was getting old, very old, for few people could remember when Pedro's hair was other than scant and gray, or his steps other than halting and feeble.

The even tenor of the old man's way had brought him in contact with few people. He had made no enemies and no friends, and people were content that old Pedro should remain a mystery.

Thus it happened that when the old man came and went on market days there was no kind word for him, no handshakes, no cheerful salutations. He came and went like a shadow, and the school children hurried past him as if his very silence frightened them.

Now, between the market and Pedro's home, and so situated, therefore, that Pedro passed in going and coming, was Maj. Deal's home, a beautiful old fashioned homestead, with a long shaded walk that led down to the gate.

And the major had killed Pedro's dog.

Of course, the major never did admit that he had done wrong.

The little terrier had barked at his heels and he had struck at it with his cane. He never intended to kill the dog, but it was only a dog—and only old Pedro's dog at that. Of course Pedro viewed matters a little differently, and as a natural result of the difference the major forgot all about it, while Pedro remembered it very distinctly. In fact, there can be no doubt that the major's baby saved a great deal of trouble about that dog. When the weather was fair the baby would be at the gate as Pedro passed on Saturday afternoon, and she had learned to recognize Pedro, while the lonely old man had learned to love and yearn for that baby welcome. He always paused a moment in passing to raise his tattered old hat and smile at baby Maud. So, while Pedro remembered very distinctly that the major had killed his dog, his thoughts of revenge had given place to other and better thoughts, for all of which the major's baby was entirely responsible.

One beautiful Saturday afternoon in the autumn of 1879 a group of school girls were gathered at the major's gate, and in their midst was the major's baby. Right royally the little queen was holding her court. Pedro saw all that as he came on with his basket.

Suddenly a shout of warning was heard, and pistol shots were fired at Mayor Weed's house, just two doors above the major's.

"Mad dog! Mad dog!" shouted half a dozen voices.

The frightened girls turned to see the vicious brute only a few steps from them, and ran screaming toward the major's house.

The major's wife met them at the door.

"Oh, Mrs. Deal—a mad dog!"

The young mother's face was deathly pale, and without a word she ran toward the gate.

Before reaching the gate, however, she saw that her baby was safe, and she recognized Pedro. He had placed the child carefully upon the grass just inside the gate and then closed the gate.

Then the dog had attacked Pedro.

The huge maddened brute was biting savagely. The blood was flowing freely from the old man's arms and hands, and from an ugly wound in the cheek. Pedro was nearly exhausted, and his feeble blows with a knife availed but little. The mother had picked up her baby and was watching the contest in an agony of suspense. Throwing all his strength with his blow, the old man drove his knife to the hilt in the dog's throat, and as the brute lay foaming and writhing at his feet the old man dropped his knife and leaned wearily against the gate. A group of people soon gathered about him, and the major's wife called his name, but the old man paid no attention.

As he rested the baby's hands were upon his bowed head.

"Pedro," again said the major's wife.

Slowly the old man raised his head. He didn't see the young mother, or the people around him; he saw only the baby. He took the child's hands in his own a moment, and then turned away. Picking up his empty basket, the old man started toward his home. They were all Pedro's friends now, and one offered to carry him home in a wagon, and another to carry his basket, but the old man shook his head. So he went all alone, and they watched him until he was lost to sight.

Dead or alive, he was never seen again.

Before night everybody in Beaverton knew how Pedro had saved Baby Maud's life, at what must inevitably be the cost of his own.

The major was off at court and was to be home on the 12 o'clock train. The night was dark and lowering, and the major had barely reached his home before the storm came in all its fury. It was a fearful storm. The heavens were flashing continuously and the thunder rolled in quick, deafening peals. The rain fell in floods, and unceasingly. The wind howled and shrieked like a thing of life, the houses rocked and tottered upon their foundations, and all that night not a soul slept in Beachton.

Next morning the storm slacked, and gradually the wind died out. The rain continued to fall for two hours, but by noon it had ceased. Soon after dinner the major put on his rubber boots and waded through the mud to the mayor's home. Then the mayor put on his rubber boots, and together they went to Dr. Elder, the deacon's. Maybe the deacon didn't have any rubber boots, for he simply tucked his trousers into his boots, and they all went together to Pedro's home.

The major was a few steps in advance where the path ended at the top of the cliff as he stopped and looked almost straight down upon the ledge where Pedro's home had been since '39.

As he looked the major's face paled, and uttering an exclamation of surprise he pointed downward to the ledge.

The parson and the major looked, too, and not a word was spoken.

Pedro's home was gone. — Chicago Herald.

A W. C. T. U. UNPLEASANTNESS.

Mrs. Hobart Makes a Vigorous Attack on Mrs. J. Ellen Foster.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Feb. 6.—Mrs. H. A. Hobart, president of the Minnesota W. C. T. U., in an open letter to Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, president of the Iowa W. C. T. U., vigorously attacks the latter for her adherence to the Republican party and her alleged efforts to disrupt the National W. C. T. U. The letter, after referring to the disaffection in the W. C. T. U. ranks, asks Mrs. Foster four questions:

First—Did you not pay a certain amount of money to make up a deficiency in national dues so that a larger delegation could be sent to the New York convention? Second—Did you not refuse to confirm the election of certain women elected constitutionally by the districts to represent them at New York? Third—Did you not, by protests for four years, by unchristian charges (now proven false), and by newspaper reports seek to bring about secession in W. C. T. U. ranks, and to foal such a secession movement, and did you not pay the bills accruing in this work? Fourth—Have you not been in receipt of pay from the Republican party for these and other services?"

If Mrs. Foster's answers do not confirm the above, Mrs. Hobart says proof in the shape of records, etc., will be forthcoming.

Drexel Dines the Vice President-Elect.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 6.—Mr. A. J. Drexel entertained Vice President-elect Levi P. Morton last evening at dinner at his residence at Thirty-ninth and Walnut streets. Mr. Drexel's dinner to the vice president-elect, it was stated, had no political significance. Mr. Drexel, as an old friend of Mr. Morton, invited several well-known Philadelphia professional and business men to meet the vice president-elect before the latter entered on his official duties. The guests were leading railroad men, journalists, lawyers, financiers and business men.

A TRIUMPH FOR THE TIMES.

Bonfield and Schaack, the Chicago Police Officers, Suspended.

CHICAGO, Feb. 7.—By direction of Mayor Roche, Superintendent of Police Hubbard last night suspended from the police of this city John Bonfield, inspector and chief of detectives; Michael J. Schaack, captain, and Jacob Loewenstein, detective, pending an investigation of the charges made by The Chicago Times.

In an interview Police Inspector Bonfield said last night regarding his removal from office: "I have known for a long time that pressure has been brought to bear upon the mayor to remove me for political reasons, and I have been called upon by men high in Republican councils, who have urged as reasons for my retirement, the antagonism of the Anarchists, the gamblers, the prostitutes, and the dive keepers to the present city administration. It was represented that my retirement would be in the interest of the party. To all of which I replied that if the party had sunk so low that it required my sacrifice in order to get the patronage of the Socialists and other lawless elements, it ought to go down."

OUR NATIONAL LAW-MAKERS.

What They Are Doing for the Country's Good—Bills Passed, Etc.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 6.—The Oklahoma bill was received by the senate yesterday, and, after a strong effort on the part of its opponents to have it referred to the Indian committee, was referred to the territories committee. An amendment to the sundry civil bill was offered by Hawley, appropriating $50,000 as a gift to Mrs. Gen. Sheridan, in recognition of the dead soldier's services. A resolution to appoint an additional clerk to the commerce committee, whose duty it shall be to prepare a report on every item in the river and harbor bill, was agreed to, as was the joint resolution to pay the representatives of the late Capt. Eads $500,000 for work on the Mississippi jetties. The legislative appropriation was taken up and an amendment adopted increasing the salary of the president's private secretary to $5,000. An amendment to increase the clerical force of the civil service commission was offered, and pending discussion the conference report on the amendment to the inter-state commerce act was presented. It was a disagreement and Sherman moved to concur in the house view of the matter, but the senate adjourned leaving both matters unsettled.

The house debated the conference report on the Nicaragua bill, and without action took recess to 7:30, at which hour the house considered District business, and adjourned at 10:30.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 7.—The senate yesterday passed the bill giving the Big Horn Southern Railroad company right-of-way through the Fort Custer military reservation in Montana. The bill to investigate the matter of naval officers' claims came up and was debated and laid aside and consideration of the legislative, executive and judicial bill resumed, the question being on an amendment increasing the clerical force on the civil service commission. No action was taken, and at 4:55 the senate adjourned.

The new member of the house, from the First Indiana district, Mr. Frank B. Posey, was sworn in yesterday. Consideration of the conference report on the Nicaragua canal bill was continued and the report was agreed to—177 to 69. The house recedes from nearly all its amendments to the bill. Dingley offered a resolution inquiring whether the instructions to United States revenue cutters in Behring's sea were different in 1888 to 1887. The house then voted to consider a pension bill in favor of the widow of Brig. Gen. Emery, but filibustering against the bill killed it for the day, and recess to 7:30 was taken. At the evening session the bill to secure the relinquishment by the Sioux Indians of part of their reservation in Dakota was advanced to the point of voting and then laid aside. Some other Indian business was transacted and the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 8.—In the senate Thursday the conference report on the bill to incorporate the Maritime Canal company, of Nicaragua was agreed to. The credentials of McPherson of New Jersey for a new senatorial term were presented and filed. Bill was passed to empower the Mount Carmel Development company to draw water from the Wabash and its tributaries in Illinois. After further morning business Chandler's resolution relative to pay of naval officers was taken up.

The house passed the bill reserving all public lands now subject to private entry for disposal under the homestead law, and also the bill increasing the pension of Gen. Emery's widow to $50 per month. In committee of the whole the army appropriation was considered and Randall made a point of order against the $500,000 provided for submarine torpedoes, pending the decision of which the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 9.—Chandler's resolution relating to the claims of naval officers and Chace's as to the removal of postal clerks were agreed to by the senate yesterday, and the resolution for an inquiring into the state of suffrage in Louisiana and elsewhere in the country was sent to the elections committee. The house bill to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines river lands in Iowa was passed. The legislative appropriation bill was resumed, the amendment to increase the clerical force of the civil service commission was rejected, and the bill passed. The Union Pacific funding bill was briefly debated and laid over, a new conference on the territorial admission bill ordered, a presidential message on the Samoan affair read, a number of private pension bills passed and the senate adjourned.

The house passed the army appropriation bill and then after rejecting a motion to strike out the clause in the agricultural bill changing the system for the distribution of seeds, passed that bill also and took recess to 7:30, at which hour the passage of private pension bills was taken up, thirty-eight passed and the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 11.—The senate Saturday passed a bill to establish a United States court in Indian territory; also the fortification bill, with one amendment appropriating $200,000 for torpedoes controlled in their action and movements from the shore. Ingalls, Hoar, Cullom and Cockrell were appointed the senate committee on inauguration ceremonies and a resolution was agreed to providing that the presiding officer of the senate appoint the senate tellers at the count of the electoral vote on Wednesday. The Pacific railways funding bill coming up Stewart took the floor to advocate a general and particular regulation of the affairs of those railways by the government. Blair interrupted with questions occasionally, which provoked Stewart to remark that if the senator had listened he needn't have asked them, to which Blair retorted that he was the only senator who had listened to Stewart at all for much of the time. The senate adjourned without action on the bill.

The house passed bills authorizing the bridging of the Mississippi river at La Crosse, Wis., and granting right-of-way to the Big Horn Southern railway through the Fort Custer military reservation. Disagreement on the Dakota admission bill was reported and a resolution was offered to instruct the house conferees to strike New Mexico from the bill and agree to the admission of North Dakota, Washington and Montana by proclamation. It went over. The remainder of the day was devoted to a debate on the post office appropriation, which was pending when the house adjourned.

Failure of the Pacific Guano Company.

THE TIMID BELIEVER.

LESSON VII, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES. FEB. 17.

Text of the Lesson Mark iv. 25-34—Commit Verses 33, 34—Golden Text Mark v. 36—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

(Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly, by permission of H. L. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.)

After healing the man or men of Gadara, who were so afflicted by the demons, He, at the urgent request of the people, left them and recrossed the sea to His own city, Capernaum (Matt. ix, 1), where Luke viii, 40, says that the people gladly received Him, for they were all waiting for Him. Let all Christian workers learn from this that whether teachers or preachers, if they speak the truth faithfully, and in some quarters it is not received, there are other places where they are waiting for it. The field is the world, and our orders are to preach the gospel to every creature, but we are not told that all will receive it; rather are we taught that some will believe and some will believe not (Acts xxviii, 24), and that perhaps only a fourth of the seed will bear fruit, and tares spring up even among that (Matt. xiii,); but all that the Father giveth unto Him (out of this present evil world) shall come to Him, and Him that cometh shall not be cast out (John vi, 37); the elect body, the church, shall be completed, the bride shall [illegible] gathered, the wedding shall be furnished with guests, the marriage of the Lamb is all come, and after that shall Israel be comforted and all the earth be filled with His glory. Hallelujah! But what is the connection of all this with the lesson of today? Why, just this: If you would be there and see and share His glory, you must not simply hear of Him and know about Him, but you must so touch Him that virtue (R. V., power) shall flow from Him to you and know that you are healed.

25. "A certain woman had an issue of blood twelve years." Jesus was at this time on the way to the house of Jairus, a ruler of the synagogue, to bring back to life his daughter, a little girl 12 years of age, who was dying when the father left home (Lu. viii, 42); as He and his disciples went with Jairus a great crowd followed and thronged Him, and this poor afflicted woman among the rest. It mattered not whether, as in the case of this woman, the life (for the life of the flesh is in the blood, Lev. xvii, 11) was slowly but surely ebbing away; or whether, as in the case of the little girl, the life had clean gone; whether it had just gone, or been gone a few hours (Luke vii, 12), or some days (John xi, 39); it mattered not to the Prince of Life, for in Him is life, and a word from Him is sufficient in either case. It mattered not whether the affliction had lasted twelve, or eighteen, or thirty-eight, or forty years. (Luke xiii, 11; John v, 5; Acts iv, 22.) His power was more than sufficient in either case. Now as to life and health that amounts to anything, we have it not until we receive Jesus Christ; let every teacher and scholar ponder carefully that marvelous verse composed of words of one syllable which almost any little child can read and remember: "He that hath the Son hath the life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not the life." (1 John v, 12, R. V.)

26. "Had suffered many things, * * * had spent all, * * * was nothing bettered, but rather grew worse." Many physicians, much suffering, money all gone, given up by all, all the time growing worse, no hope, utterly helpless, unclean, undone; what a pitiful case and yet just the one for Jesus, for "He giveth power to the faint and to them that have no might He increaseth strength." (Isa. xl, 29). If she had been improving ever so little under some one of these many physicians, the probability is that she might not have come to Jesus, but her complete failure to find help anywhere else led her to Jesus. The least reliance upon ourselves may hinder us from coming to Jesus for salvation, or being saved, may hinder Him from working in us to will and to do of His good pleasure. To be saved, we must come to Him without one rag of our own filthy righteousness.

27. "When she had heard of Jesus." Somebody's testimony had reached her, perhaps the testimony of several had been necessary to convince her; many had been healed of divers diseases in this city, among others Peter's wife's mother, the man in the synagogue with the unclean spirit, the nobleman's son, the sick of the palsy (Mark i, ii; John iv), and the testimony of some of these healed ones or their friends had reached this woman and convinced her that He could heal her too.

28. "If I may touch but his clothes, I shall be whole." This was her firm persuasion and on this belief she acted.

29. "And straightway the fountain of her blood was dried up, * * * she was healed." Over twenty times have we already met in this Gospel the word "straightway," or "forthwith," or "immediately," which in each case is the same word in the Greek, and it should incite us as servants of Christ to do very quickly whatever our hands find to do for Him, expecting quick results and yet patiently continuing, leaving results to Him. Quick as the lightning flash, but with health and not death, came the fullness of physical life back to her body; she had not felt like this for twelve long years, she is young again, she is well, and He did it just as she believed.

30. "Jesus immediately knowing * * * said, Who touched my clothes?" Even before she came near He saw her coming, His spirit wrought the faith in her and brought her to Him; and yet she might have resisted the Spirit as so many did, have done and are doing, but, blessed be God, she did not resist.

31. "Thou seest the multitude thronging Thee, and sayest Thou, Who touched Me?" This was what the disciples said to Him when all the people denied, and the woman herself sought to be hid (Luke viii, 45, 47), for they did not seem to understand the difference between touching Him as the crowd did and the touch of faith that drew from Him the healing power. They were like many today who frequent the house of God, but wonder at any one who finds the utmost delight in so doing.

32. "He looked round about to see her that had done this thing." Not in grief or anger, but kindly, lovingly He looked upon her and she could not withstand His look.

33. "The woman, fearing and trembling, knowing what was done in her, came and fell down before Him and told Him all the truth." Luke viii, 47, says that she declared before all the people why she touched Him and how she was healed immediately.

34. "And He said unto her, Daughter." This is the only instance on record in which He thus personally addressed any one with this word of affection; think of her missing this! "Be of good comfort." (Matt. ix, 22; Luke viii, 48.) There was no occasion for fear and trembling, but rather for great joy and rejoicing. "Thy faith hath made thee whole," or saved thee, for it is the same word as in Luke vii, 50. "Go in peace and be whole of thy plague." She had thought to quietly obtain her health and return home, and we may hope that she would not have failed to make it known and glorify her healer; but she had not dreamed of honor like this. He spoke to her so kindly and before all the people called her "Daughter."

THE LITTLE COAT.

Here's the little coat—but oh!
Where is he we've censured so?
Don't you hear us calling near?
Back! Come back and never fear.
You may wander where you will,
Over orchard, field and hill
You may kill the birds or do
Anything that pleases you;
Ah! This empty coat of his
Every tatter worth a kiss;
Every stain as pure instead
As the white stars overhead;
And the pockets—homes were they
Of the little hands that play
Now no more—but absent, thus Beckon us.

—James Whitcomb Riley

FOR LIFE AND LOVE.

Harriet Gelder was the most provoking, pretty and altogether charming little coquette that ever drove a devoted lover distracted with her capricious ways. Florian Courtland was handsome and winning enough to have enslaved some other woman, but his heart was bound up in the brunette beauty, who daily destroyed his peace. She loved him for all that, but he tried in vain to make her confess it.

It was in the springtime of the year, and it had rained incessantly for two weeks. Harriet resided with her aunt, Miss Hannah Linwood, in Thornway, about eight miles away from where Florian lived. Naturally, the impatient lover longed for fair weather, but as there was no immediate prospect of a cessation of the rain one Sunday morning he resolved to set the weather at defiance, and accordingly sent for his horse and prepared for his stormy ride.

If he had been bound for any other destination, he would have turned back before going a mile, as the road appeared to grow worse every step, and his horse plodded through the mud, stumbling frequently in the many ruts and pitfalls.

After traveling for what seemed to him to be hours, he reached the bridge which spanned the little river, two miles from Thornway. In the distance he could see the gray walls of the Linwood mansion, and in his impatience he was about to spur his horse to a gallop, when he noticed that the land at a little distance below the bridge was completely flooded, the river overflowing, having submerged it to a wide extent.

A point or knoll of land close upon the river's bank formed a little island in the midst of the whirling flood, and upon this island stood a small wooden house, which Florian saw was occupied, for a thin wreath of smoke ascended from the chimney. If there were people in the house their position was most perilous, as the water was rising fast and would soon sweep away the house.

As Florian rode towards the house he saw a female form approach the window, and a handkerchief was waved imploringly. Unhesitatingly he rode into the water, which soon grew deeper, and his horse was obliged to swim. Florian urged him forward, and drawing near the house, the door was thrown open and he cried out in surprise, for there stood Miss Linwood and Harriet Gelder.

"Harriet!" cried Florian, "for heaven's sake, how came you here?"

"We came to see a sick woman," replied Harriet, with prompt coolness, "and the water rose before we"——

"It is rising now, and fast," he interrupted, excitedly, "and there is no time to waste. My horse will carry two; which of you shall I take first?"

"The sick woman first," said Harriet, quietly.

Florian trembled as he looked at the feeble old woman whom Miss Linwood was assisting from her chair to the door, and whom he had not noticed until Harriet called his attention to her. He trembled with the appalling fear that there would not be time to go and return twice before the swiftly rising waters should have torn the frail structure from its foundations, for there was already an inch of water upon the floor. But he only cast one glance at Harriet's calm face and stooped to lift the sick woman up before him. Without a word he turned his horse toward the shore, and the good beast, with its double burden, struggled back through the flood.

They were standing knee deep in water when he once more approached the already shaking building. He did not speak a word, but looked silently from Harriet to her aunt, his white face growing whiter yet as Harriet said, in steady tones, "Aunt Hannah first."

"Harriet"—— commenced Miss Linwood.

"Go, Aunt Hannah!"

"Harriet, I won't!"

"You must!" said Harriet, firmly.

"Harriet, Harriet! for pity's sake"——

"You are delaying her, Miss Hannah," exclaimed Florian, hoarsely. "Come—she will not yield; if she dies!"

With a groan Miss Linwood gave up, and he lifted her upon his horse. The turbulent waters washed into the room, and Harriet staggered and clung to the wall for support. Florian's face was ghastly as he bent forward and placed his hand upon her shoulder, whispering, in a choked voice, "Kiss me, Harriet."

She put her arms around his neck and kissed him—a long, passionate kiss, which was their first and might be their last.

He strained her to him, saying, "Harriet, you do love me?"

"Yes, Florian."

Then she leaned against the wall again, as he went, and hid her face, trying to shut out the sight of those yellow waters creeping up the side of the rooms, higher and higher with every wave that rolled in through the door.

As Florian reached the shore a carriage was approaching in the distance, rocking from side to side with the furious speed to which the driver was lashing the horses.

"It's the carriage from Linwood," said Miss Hannah; "we have been afraid of a freshet and they have taken alarm and come to look for us."

Florian did not hear her; he was urging his exhausted horse into the flood again. The poor beast trembled and hesitated; but Florian spurred him fiercely on, smiting him with his clinched fist and shouting at him in his frantic excitement.

When the hurrying carriage reached the spot and Miss Linwood's coachman leaped to the ground, Florian was half way back to Harriet. Mistress and man stood with pallid faces and hearts that hardly beat, silently watching the beautiful girl as she clung to her frail support, and the young man, with his white face, and his golden hair blowing back, as he dashed madly through the flood to her rescue.

While they watched a great billow came rolling in from the river, roaring fearfully, and tossing its yellow water as it dashed upon Harriet's refuge. Miss Linwood screamed, and her servant uttered a hoarse cry, for where the house had been was a whirling wreck of boards and timbers, and Florian's horse was struggling, riderless, towards the shore.

But another moment and they saw that Harriet yet clung to the floating roof and Florian was beside her upon it. Seizing a long board, as the waters whirled it within his reach, he guided the frail raft with it towards the shore. As he neared the land the coachman from Linwood sprang into the water and came to his assistance, and in a few moments they were all standing upon the land, a wet, dripping, but profoundly thankful party.

They proceeded, as fast as the carriage could carry them, to Linwood, where they all found plenty of employment for the remainder of the day in getting rid of the effects of their perilous adventure—so far as they could do so.

It transpired that the sick woman had not received any injury; Miss Hannah had caught a slight cold; Harriet had caught a severe one, and Florian had caught—Harriet.

African Goats.

A pair recently brought from Africa has been added to the Central park collection of animals.

"There is no particular value attached to the animals, except from their rarity," remarked Director Conklin. "They are the first pair of Morocco goats probably that ever found their way to this country. They are young, in their second year, quite gentle, as you see, and will eat out of your hand. But if startled, all their inherited wildness comes out. I never saw such animals. They seem to have muscles of rubber, from the way they jump. I have never had so much trouble with the most dangerous animals we have here.

"The jumping of the thoroughbred hunters in Madison Square garden a few weeks ago doesn't begin to compare with that of these goats. I put them in a yard having a fence eight feet high, but they jumped it so easily that now I have a fence ten feet high.

"The space within their inclosure is so limited that they cannot get a good start to go so high, or I would not trust them with anything less than a fifteen foot fence. Then, they are getting accustomed to these quarters and are not so easily alarmed as they were, but I think, if startled, they might still clear this fence. Their leap is peculiar. They crouch a little, give a short jump in the air, and as they strike the ground bound upward again as if they were shot from a catapult. The muscles of their legs are extremely tough, but the legs are not adapted for great rapidity or endurance in running. They have been developed by generations of climbing on the Morocco hills. As these goats get older and their bodies in captivity become heavier, they will probably become less active. Possibly our native goat has lost his faculty of high jumping, if he ever had it, since he became partly civilized and accustomed to a diet of brown paper."—Scientific American.

The Secret of His Power to Please.

A venerable white haired clergyman in one of the city churches recently preached in Norristown. He had hardly got home from the church before the door bell rang and a charming girl of 18 asked to see him. He received her, they talked about the sermon and other things, until finally she asked diffidently:

"Oh, won't you please give me a lock of your hair?"

"Certainly, my child," said the old gentleman, flattered at the request. "I'll send it to you to-morrow," and he did.

On his return to the city he had five more requests of the same kind, and he proudly boasted to his wife that he was glad to see that he had not yet lost his power to please. He declared his trip had been most charming, and all went well until his wife received this note:

"MY DEAR MRS. X.: Won't you please ask your good husband to send me just a little lock of his hair? We have all been taking lessons in making hair flowers. So many of the other girls asked him and he sent it to them, but I thought I would rather ask you to get it for me. Now, won't you please do this for me, it is so hard to get white hair for lilies of the valley?"

This was a terrible blow, and the less now said about locks of hair in the married gentleman's presence the better.—Philadelphia Press.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tube. Microscopic research, however, has proven this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permentally cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. DIXON & SON, 303 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Are You Taking It?

"Are you taking the F. E. C. Kidney Remedy?" is becoming a common inquiry. The F. E. C. is known to be an honest remedy and is doing a world of good. J. J. Orr sells it.

WHAT ON EARTH

Is the reason people will not, can not, or do not see any difference in cheap nostrums put up by Cheap John houses or irresponsible parties at enormous profits, rather than take a medicine of world wide reputation and one that is giving universal satisfaction at equal price? No medicine in the world is giving such unparalleled satisfaction for purifying the blood as BEGGS' BLOOD PURIFIER & BLOOD MAKER, and every bottle that does not do its work will cost you nothing.

J. J. ORR Druggist.

Used one bottle of Mother's Friend before my first confinement. It is a wonderful remedy. Looked and felt so well afterwards friends remarked it. Would not be without Mother's Friend for any consideration.

LONG LIFE.

There is nothing in the world more generally desired than long life, yet the majority of people put off caring for their health—not because they are really careless, but because we live our lives at such a pace we have not time to give the subject sufficient thought until we recive a reminder in the shape of a severe illness.

Then, too, we are constantly bewildered by the various schools of medicine, and the physicians who represent them, and often blunder in our choice of a doctor.

If people only knew that the very best health-keeper, life-preserver, and disease-preventer that has yet been discovered, is simered down into a concentrated and very palatable form in the shape of New Style Pleasant Taste Vinegar Bitters, they would not hesitate a moment to try it.

But they do not know. How can they know, when so many not only worthless, but positively injurious drugs are constantly flooding the market under various names and guises, that the New Style Vinegar Bitters is as bad as any of them.

They do not know, of course, unless they have courage to try the New Style. It straightens out a tangled up system in a very short while, and those who buy it once buy it always.

Why dont you try it, reader? It is sent out by a responsible house, and is exactly as represented. It costs but one dollar for a very large bottle. Try it at once and you will never be so glad of anything in your life. Your druggists may not have it, but he will order it for you. Be sure it says New Style Pleasant Taste on carton and bottle before you take it. Try it, and you will feel happier than if you had found a gold mine—of health.

James Tripp, a Covert citizen of 65 summers, partially demented and living alone, was cremated with his cabin on the morning of Jan. 29.

A Birmingham man tapped a nice flowing well recently and not long afterward all his neighbors' wells went dry. His gain seems to have been literally their loss.

W. H. Faxen, an Ovid pioneer, says it's all bosh about this winter having no parallel for mildness, and cites his own experience of sowing wheat on Jan. 15, 1839, which showed above the serface in twelve days. There were only a few light frosts after that date that season.

It cost J. O. Moore, a Soo citizen, $1,500 to marry an Ohio girl because he had agreed to wed another fair daughter of that state and didn't fulfill his part of the contract.

The statement that opposites attract in the sexes may explain the marriage of a Grand Haven couple, the gentleman weighing 130 pounds, while the fair bride of 19 summers weighs 319. When she gets her growth 'tis expected that she'll make a much better showing.

William Crandall, a Pellston party, puts in forty days at the Petoskey bastile because of an over-fondness for beating his wife.

St. Clair county citizens are likely to have a busy time of it since the "White-Caps" organized to see that people properly deport themselves, and the "Wary Watchers" have sprung into existence to watch the first-named association.

A Union City gentleman has devised an all-metal threshing machine that's so much of a success that Battle Creek parties are willing to risk $100,000 in pushing the venture. Battle Creek is great on the thresh.

Some two years ago, Willie Ray, a Deep River boy of 4 summers, was seriously burned by falling into a kettle of hot water, but recovered. The other day he took a dive into a can of boiling brine which will doubtless result fatally.

The proposed extension of Battle Creek's city limits is vigorously opposed by the farmers who object to being "taken in" to the tune of greatly increased taxes.

Forty car-loads of ice are being shipped daily from Lake George, near Cadillac, to southern Michigan points to keep the weather from becoming oppressively warm.

Battle Creek is specially represented at the Jackson prison, albeit she may not be overly proud of that fact. J. H. Whipple, whilom president of the Pemorokie mills at that city and active church worker withal, who is now "doing time" for the state on account of forgery and financially wrecking the company over which he presided, now teaches a Bible class at the penitentiary. The [illegible] Sullivan, moreover, not as far as circumstances will permit.

Some time ago, a Portland lady lost a fur collar which the strictest search failed to reveal, and so she came to the conclusion that the garment had been stolen. Thereafter night the lady's husband dreamed that the missing collar was secreted beneath a stump not far from their domicile. This experience was repeated on the following night and likewise on the third, whereupon the man of dreams was roused to action. Proceeding to the stump he found a cavity beneath it—just as he'd seen it in the repeated visions, and reaching down with one hand, felt the fur. He soon afterward made his escape along with a quantity of elegant perfumery, while the polecat rolled over for another nap.

R. R. Warner, a Jackson gentleman, has been appointed special administrator of the murdered Mrs. Latimer's estate at the request of her son Irving, while the latter has been held to the circuit court for the commission of the terrible crime.

A Jackson lady bid her husband's clothes because he was in the habit of imbibing too much firewater o' nights, whereupon the fratchead of the family wrapped a rubber coat over his night-clothes and sallied forth in the darkness, forgetting to return. Now the poor wife is heartbroken over her loss.

A national association of furnituremakers was organized last week at Grand Rapids, with Charles R. Sligh, of that city, as president. They decided that 'twere better not to organize a furniture trust, but unanimously agreed that they wouldn't object to better freight rates from the railway companies.

While the legislature is considering the advisability of making a law offering a $12 bounty for wolf scalps, an upper peninsula Yankee is considering the scheme of starting a wolf-hand raising the "critters" for the bounty, there'd be in 'em. What won't a Yankee do for cash.

The Grand Trunk Railway company is experimenting with an electrical device for heating its passenger coaches, the invention of one of its employes. One thing is sure—the fatal car stove must go.

Hymen's folks ought to be happy since bread, both spiritual and temporal, is abundant. The former is supplied by three revival meetings without money and without price, while the local bakers are at loggerheads and the latter sells at 3 cents per loaf.

The variety of mementoes that "sweet sixteen" carefully treasures is something truly marvelous. A Jackson girl's collection comprises a wedding vest more'n a century old which she carefully places beneath her pillow each night to conjure pleasant dreams. The sweet creeping that maketh waves gnashed a lively little bracket at three o'clock, the other evening, at explosion of the kind making the music. Loss $17.60, with no injuries and nobody injured.

A SELF-ACKNOWLEDGED SCOUNDREL.

What John E. Fitzgerald and John Boyle O'Reilly Say of Le Caron.

BOSTON, Feb. 9.—Collector John E. Fitzgerald of the internal revenue department and Mr. John Boyle O'Reilly were seen by a reporter as to the testimony of Le Caron before the Parnell commission. Mr. Fitzgerald said that the evidence was that of a self-acknowledged scoundrel, whose life had been a lie for the past quarter of a century. His evident object was to connect Parnell and his associates with the extreme wing of the Irish National party, but Mr. Parnell and his associates have defined their political platforms and all honest men will believe him and them against the testimony of such a self-confessed villain. Concerning Le Caron's boldness in testifying, he said:

"The history of the Irish state trials for the last twenty years shows that an Irish Nemesis has followed such men as he, from Corydon to Carey. No man who initiates his fellow-countrymen into revolutionary societies, then sells their blood or their liberty to the British government has been allowed to live. The wretched life he would save must be spent in voluntary imprisonment as an underservant in a British jail. This man will probably be no exception to the rule."

Mr. O'Reilly said: "The fellow may have met me, as he says, at the Boston convention of the National league, but I have no memory of him. This convention, which he represents as a secret meeting of conspirators, was an open gathering held in Faneuil hall, reported fully in all the Boston papers and the members of which, many of them distinguished Americans from other states, were the guests of the city of Boston, at the invitation of Mayor Prince. Those conventions that he mentions, in Philadelphia and Boston, were filled with men respected in their various communities, presidents, doctors, lawyers, merchants, business men of all kinds. The Chicago convention, which he represents as a particularly desperate dynamite assembly, was presided over by Rev. Dr. Betts, the leading Episcopalian clergyman in St. Louis."

Mr. O'Reilly said that Le Caron was an impudent rascal, depending on distance to cover his fraud, and on the ignorance of the English people as to the real nature of the conventions and men he speaks of.

ARREST OF JUDGE RUCKER.

He Assaults a Man and Then Attempts to Draw a Gun.

DENVER, Colo., Feb. 9.—Judge Rucker, who achieved some fame through his newspaper controversy with Senator Blackburn, engaged in an encounter Friday in Jones' saloon which resulted in his being lodged in jail on a charge of carrying concealed weapons and disturbance. Col. John Arkins, of The News, Chief of Police Grady, and Senator-elect Wolcott were standing at the bar when Judge Rucker entered, and, without saying a word, walked up to Arkins and struck him in the face with the palm of his hand. While Arkins was recovering from his astonishment Judge Rucker backed off and put his hand, so it is said, on his revolver. Chief Grady then arrested Rucker and, after disarming him, took his distinguished prisoner to the city jail. The trouble grew out of some disparaging comments on Rucker's ability as a fighter made by Arkins to a New York reporter during the progress of the Blackburn-Rucker controversy.

Novel Fire in Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Feb. 9.—The immense coal elevator of W. H. Brown Sons' was Friday set on fire and burned to the ground. The Pan Handle Railroad company have arranged to build a freight house on the site of the elevator, and concluded it was cheaper to burn it down than to tear it down. The fire department was called upon to watch the surrounding property and the elevator was set on fire and rapidly consumed by the flames in the presence of a large crowd attracted by the novelty of having a building burned to order.

Left Her Child to Die in the Snow.

AUBURN, N. Y., Feb. 9.—Mary Billby was arrested at Union Springs, near this city, Friday night, on a requisition from the governor of Michigan. The crime charged is that she deserted her infant child and left it to die in the snow by the roadside, somewhere in Michigan. The child was fortunately rescued. The woman eloped two or three years ago from Union Springs with a man named Titus, who is said to be implicated in the crime and for whom the authorities are searching.

Fire in Wisconsin Towns.

HUDSON, Wis., Feb. 9.—At 11:45 Friday night fire destroyed the building containing the office of The Hudson Star and Times, the Odd Fellow's hall, and George Randall's insurance office. Total loss, $10,000; insurance, $6,000.

RHINELANDER, Wis., Feb. 11.—The entire plant of the Wisconsin Sulphate Fibre company, located at Monico, twelve miles south of here, was destroyed by fire Friday night. Loss, $50,000, insurance small.

A Strike at Minneapolis.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Feb. 9.—All the engineers on the Motor Street Railway line struck a few minutes before noon Saturday. The strike is the result of reductions in the working force of the line recently made, and various drastic regulations adopted by the management.

Declined to Resign.

A Notable Removal by President Cleveland.

EDGERTON NO LONGER IN OFFICE.

The President Asks for His Resignation, and Not Obeying It Summarily Bounces the Indiana Civil Service Commissioner—What the Judge Says About It—"Billy" Mason Lets Loose on South Carolina.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 11.—Judge A. P. Edgerton, one of the civil service commissioners, says he called at the White House Friday, and while he was there the president asked him for his resignation, as he desired to appoint Hugh S. Thompson, of South Carolina to the position. Mr. Edgerton said he had received no intimation before his call as the president that his official head was wanted for the executive basket. The president said that there was little hope of securing the place for Mr. Thompson as long as there was no suitable vacancy on the commission. Mr. Edgerton, however, promptly declined to resign, holding that his resignation would not be politic, creditable to himself, nor calculated to help any other person (intimating that Mr. Thompson could not be confirmed if nominated). Of course the president might exercise his prerogative if he saw fit. The president did see fit, and when Edgerton reached his office Saturday he found the following letter awaiting him:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 9. DEAR SIR: You are hereby removed from the office of United States civil service commissioner. GROVER CLEVELAND.

Hon. A. P. Edgerton.

Mr. Edgerton is indignant at this summary proceeding and wants everybody to know it. He said Saturday night: "The president sent for me and after beating about the bush finally asked for my resignation. I asked him the reason. He said he wanted to give the place to Thompson. I asked him if that was the only reason, and he replied that it was. I then declined to resign, as I said I would not be a party to any such a dirty piece of business. He replied that he would be obliged to remove me, and I said all right, go ahead. The atmosphere becoming very frigid I bade him good day."

"Have there been any differences between you and the president?"

"Oh, yes, lots of them. The trouble is that he's a mugwump—the chief of them, while I am a Democrat, rock-ribbed."

"Do you think civil service reform is a fraud?"

"Oh, as carried out it has been the biggest kind of a fraud. Its friends, or some of them, meant well, but then hell is paved with good intentions."

He intends to write a letter to the president in a day or two acknowledging the receipt of his notice of removal and perhaps adding an expression of his opinion upon the president's course in the matter.

When the news of Mr. Edgerton's removal was communicated to Commissioner Lyman, that officer was surprised, and found himself in a predicament, as he was by no means satisfied that he had authority, single-handed, to discharge the formal duties of the civil service commission. As he can not act as a board by himself, he practically has no functions, and will have none till Mr. Edgerton's successor is confirmed. All he can do is to carry out old orders of the board.

There are now two vacancies on the commission, Mr. Oberly's place having never been filled. It is thought that the president had concluded that an appointment in Mr. Edgerton's place might be confirmed by the senate, as it would leave a vacancy to be filled by Mr. Harrison. Under the law one member of the commission must be a Democrat. Mr. Edgerton has been represented as being unable to agree with his colleagues. He has during the past six months been away from his office much of the time.

The president sent Thompson's nomination to the commissionership to the senate Saturday.

THE SMALLS-ELLIOTT CASE.

Mason of Illinois Speaks for the Contestant.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 11.—Congressman "Billy" Mason got the floor while the postoffice appropriations was up in the house Saturday and proceeded to make a speech that could not by any stretch of imagination be considered as pertinent to the bill before the house. His subject was the Smalls-Elliott contested election case from the Seventh South Carolina district, which has been so long in committee now that the records have to be referred to when the date of its introduction is desired. He made a terrific assault on South Carolina election methods. The laws of South Carolina had been framed for the express purpose of allowing the Democrats to cheat the Republicans at the polls. The present governor of South Carolina was the worthy executive of a corrupt law. The governor had said that God Almighty had stamped the imprint of inferiority on the black race and that the Anglo-Saxon must rule in South Carolina. He [Mason] had been in South Carolina and had seen negroes, so-called, as white as any man on this floor. The father of the contestant had been as white as any man here. Who was going to analyze Anglo-Saxon blood? If Anglo-Saxon blood was to vote were there going to be blood-testers which would say to a man, "50 per cent Anglo-Saxon, 50 per cent negro; you can have half a vote." It was not the hand of God, but the iron heel of the Anglo-Saxon that was responsible for the inferiority of the negro. Mason then went into an exposition of the particular frauds which he said had been practiced on Smalls in the Seventh district election. He said that the election had been stolen from Smalls; it was larceny, and nothing less. A man who would steal a vote would steal a horse if he had the chance. If he [Mason] had his way he would have a free ballot and a fair count in South Carolina; if it took a regiment of blue coats in every county and every penny in the treasury. He had no apologies to make for what he had said. If gentlemen were offended with him let them take it out of him and not out of his poor colored friend. The time of the Democracy was short. He had heard it said that even bad men when they came to die sometimes did an act of justice. He now approached the death-bed of the Democratic party and asked that party to do an act of justice.

Crisp of Georgia spoke briefly, stating that the testimony before the committee did not bear out Mason's charges, and that if his friends would examine the record they would feel sorry for him.

Loss of Life at a Fire.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 11.—The large building at 1412 and 1414, was destroyed by fire last night and during the progress of the conflagration a wall fell and killed George Showers, one of the firemen. Several others were badly bruised. The firms burned out were F. B. Morgan, drugs, and Wyeth & Bro., chemical laboratory. The loss is about $600,000, of which Wyeth & Bro. lose $500,000.

THE DAUGHTER.

My little daughter grows apace:
Her dolls are now quite out of date;
It seems that I must take their place
We have become such friends of late,
We might be ministers of state,
Discussing projects of great peril
Such strange new questionings dilate
The beauty of my little girl.

How tall she grows! What subtle grace
Dots every movement animate
With garments gathered for the race
She stands, a goddess slim and straight,
Young Artemis, when she was eight,
Among the myrtle bloom and laurel
I doubt if she could more than state,
The beauty of my little girl.

The baby passes from her face
Leaving the lines more delicate,
Till in her features I can trace
Her mother's smile, serene, sedate
As something at the hands of fate
To watch the onward years unfurl
Each line which goes to consecrate
The beauty of my little girl.

ENVOY.

Lord hear me, as in prayer I wait.
Thou givest all; guard Thou my pearl;
And, when Thou countest at the Gate
Thy jewels, count my little girl.

A NIGHT'S LODGING

It is no disgrace for a prospector to be poor, to have no bed except the blanket on his back, no friendly boarding house where his credit is good, no fortune favored comrade to lend him a helping hand and $5. It carries no suggestion of dissipation, wild oats, or extravagance, and implies nothing worse than a run of bad luck. So I may say without shame that in the fall of '80 I was broke. Statistics show that one out of every 750 prospectors strike "it." I occupied a prominent position among the 749. Like many a better man, my claims had panned out badly, and my assays never climbed above two figures. I had pursued the silver ignis fatuus all over the Red Cliff district until my shoes were dropping off, and acquired nothing except a stone bruise on each heel.

Any one who has ever stood by a gambling table recollects the man who first loses a quarter, more in jest than anything else; then a dollar, then flushes and nervously pulls out a bill; then sits down and loses everything in a desperate effort to get even. That is the prospector on a small scale. He plays at the faro table of fate and loses health, home, years, strength—everything except hope, and all the while smiling at his dreams, until death takes the chips out of his fingers and closes up the game. I had made pretty fair progress on this road. I had with me a veteran miner, one of the best fellows in the world, who shared my enthusiasm and thoroughly participated in my bad luck. His name was Joe Dixon.

A gentleman in Golden had "grub staked" us—giving us enough provisions to last for three months—with the understanding that he was to have a third of any discoveries. We discovered nothing, and devoured the provisions down to the last bean in the last can. Our elbows were sticking out of our sleeves, a quarter of a year's beard bristled on our chins, and we had not a five cent piece between us. This was exactly the state of our affairs when we came in sight of Leadville on our return.

We approached the camp from the southwest, and it was evening when we paused on the foothills, a mile or so away, looked down on the glimmering lights and held a council of war. Neither of us was acquainted in the place, and, although we had some hopes of finding friends in the daytime, the prospects of spending the night in a strange town were unpleasant. We were not exactly tramps, but it would have taken an expert to have told the difference. The spot where we stopped was a desolate looking slope, strewn with bowlders, and bare of vegetation, and presently Dixon called my attention to a large, square house that stood some little distance away, quite by itself, and seemed, from its darkened windows, to be untenanted.

"If it's empty," he said, "suppose we sleep all night there, and in the morning we can go into camp and rustle."

We acted upon the suggestion, and proceeded to reconnoiter the premises. The house was a two story frame, well put together, in good repair, but apparently as empty as a drum. No response came to our knocks, so finally we pushed open the door and walked in. Dixon struck a match, and we looked around and found ourselves in a large apartment, which, with another of the same size, occupied the whole lower floor. Both were furnished sparsely but well. The front room had a number of chairs, a table, and several little conveniences in it, and the rear contained a couple of beds and a washstand. On the table were a lamp, a number of papers and periodicals, all of them dated several months back, and a large inkstand in which the writing fluid had caked from disuse. The air was rather stifling, from all the windows being down, and the dust on the sills indicated that they had not been raised for some time.

We lit the lamp, and to make sure that there had been no recent occupancy of the place, went up stairs. Here were two bedrooms and a sitting room, all well furnished, and in one of the bedrooms hung a quantity of excellent clothing. The windows of this floor were also down, and everything was as silent and lonesome as the grave.

We went back to the front room, opened up the doors and windows, and proceeded to make ourselves at home, a little puzzled, but satisfied that we had stumbled into clover. To show that we were entirely open and honest in the matter we sat in the front door and smoked, and while we were thus occupied a man drove by on the road, about a couple of hundred yards away. When opposite he pulled up slightly, and we both called out "Good evening." He made no response, but looked very hard at us, and whipped up his horse.

This incident did not disturb us and presently we turned in, rolling in our blankets on the floor. But I did not sleep. As I lay there in the stillness and dark, the sense of strangeness in this empty house, the unnatural circumstance of it standing there untenanted, oppressed me, and I began to fancy queer things. I knew that dwellings were at a premium in Leadville, and this was far better than the average. Why should it be left at the mercy of the first prowling vagabond? There must be some reason—some history connected with it. I felt a creeping in my veins, and then I remembered, with a shock, that there was no lock on the door. Then I recollected the clothing up stairs. Was it possible that any sane man would leave his property unprotected in such a fashion?

Perhaps the house was haunted. I had laughed at such things, but the idea appalled me now. Then by a natural transition it occurred to my mind that some horrible crime might have been committed there. One thought that sprang out of nothingness and laid hold of me with sickening iteration was that a dead man was under the bed in a back room, and by some curious process that we have all experienced, but nobody can explain, I was aware that Dixon also was awake and frightened. Finally he spoke up:

"I feel wakeful," he said. "I believe I'll take a turn outside."

Meantime the moon had risen and flooded everything with a white glare. I got up and leaned against the open door, while he, lighting his pipe, began to pace the slope. At last he turned and glanced toward the front of the house. The moon fell full on his face, and, on the instant, lit up such a look of inhuman terror as I have never seen before and trust I may never see again. He stopped not a second, but ran, ran with all the clumsy fleetness of abject fear, stumbling, falling down, scrambling up again, always faster, until he disappeared over the hill. While this happened, I stood transfixed, and then I backed slowly out of the house. I have read of people backing away from a wild animal or a lunatic—that is the way I retreated, and, I will be honest, when I reached the slope I ran, too.

The remainder of my experience can be briefly told. I never saw or heard of Dixon again, but very fortunately I found a friend in Leadville who put me on my feet. I stayed there, and a cowardly but perfectly natural fear of being laughed at kept my mouth sealed as to the adventure of the night. What Dixon saw I did not care to speculate upon.

One day, nearly a year afterward, when I had quit prospecting and turned my attention to something more remunerative, I was out riding, and quite by accident came in sight of the house on the slope. Instantly my curiosity was revived, and I determined to have a close look at it, the bright sunlight having dissipated what fears remained. I approached it from the rear, and the place presented very much the same appearance that it did on that eventful night. Slowly I drove around, surveying it rather contemptuously until I reached the front, when one startled glance revealed to me what Dixon saw, and I took flight as precipitately and as speedily as he. Lettered over the door was the simple legend:

A National Newspaper,

most carefully edited, and adapted to the wants and tastes of intelligent readers throughout the entire country—North, South, East and West. It is a thoroughly clean paper, free from the corrupting, sensational and demoralizing trash miscalled news, which defiles the pages of too many city papers.

OUR POLITICS.

We believe the Republican party to be the true instrument of the POLITICAL PROGRESS of the American people and holding that the honest enforcement of its principles is the best guarantee of the national welfare, we shall support them with all our might; but we shall always treat opposing parties with consideration and fair play.

AGAINST THE SALOON.

The MAIL AND EXPRESS is the recognized National organ of the great Anti-Saloon Republican movement. It believes that the liquor traffic as it exists to-day in the United States is the enemy of society, a fruitful source of corruption in politics, the ally of anarchy, a school of crime, and, with its avowed purpose of seeking to corruptly control elections and legislation, is a menace to the public welfare and deserves the condemnation of all good men.

Mrs. Bellows is visiting a cousin near Dundee.

Now that the village of Britton is in the formative state and its future beauty depends so largely upon the good taste shown by the first proprietors of the village homes, we would suggest, to all persons interested, a careful plotting and ornamenting of their dooryards and gardens. Catalogues of all kinds of plants, tree, bulbs and seeds may be had free by sending for them. The catlogues issued by James Vick of Rochester N. Y. and Beach & Co. of Richmond Ind. are perfect beauties and an ornament to any center table, they are worth having for this purpose only. But it is to be hoped that every village house send for one or both of them for the sake of learning how cheaply and easily they may ornament their yards by the aid of these enterprising florists. E. W. Borden has bought largely of several florists and is making his place look very beautiful at slight expense. He kindly offers to send all orders left with him, in connection with his own orders and will charge nothing for his trouble. If any are wanting small fruits, flowers plants, seeds or bulbs he will gladly aid them in this wasy.

The club meeting at R. Clarkson's last Wednesday evening was well attended considering the weather. Dr. Loree gave an address and the discussion on local option which resulted in a verdict of—procrastination and centralization of the rum power, too much in keeping with the monopolistic legislation of the times. The meeting was enlivened with musical and literary embellishments.

A few of Ruthie Taylor's little friends gave her a surprise Saturday. Owing to the untimely rain storm the party was smaller than was anticipated but they made the best of it and all went off merrily.

The death of Mrs. Elmer Wilson though not unexpected is the occasion of much sorrow. She was an earnest conscientious woman of culturedmind and pleasing manners and will be greatly missed in the community. Her husband and his two motherless children have the heartfelt sympathy of all.

School in the Smalley district has been closed for several weeks an account of measles. District No. 3 followed suit two weeks ago, as the teacher, Lyle Crane, of Bridgewater, wys expecting an attack of the disease. He has not been disappointed. A new teacher was talked of, in case he should not be able to return, but when the measles appeared without warning in tho families of Alanson Updike and Geo. DePuy it was decided to continue the vacation. Several others were exposed before the nature of the disease was known.

Both Grace and Ed Spaulding have been quite sick as the result of vaccination. So have Mr. Mangus' children, the little boy, Clyde, having had a really serious time. Would it be heresy to ask if vaccination is quite the blessing we have been taught to believe? May be it is not responsible for the spreading of other diseases, as scrofula, cancer etc, but, at any rate, some of us would rather risk the chance of being exposed to small pox.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

Burt Holdridge is the happy possessor of a neat valentine received last week; that is the reason why he wears that broad smile of late. Burt values his treasure at least a 'cool thousand' and looks upon the donor as his best friend. It's a boy.

Geo. Hoxie returned from Pittsford Friday, where he had been, starting one of his picket-mills. Geo. says; "The mill worked to perfection and I had no trouble in downing the Lansing machine." More orders are looked for from that section.

A good deal of excitement prevailed ere on the 14th, inst., over the "beef market;" at noon the market was dull and few buyers, but before four o'clock everything was lively and beef had advanced from $1.50 @ 11.00. Paul Schwab is now the owner, of the "fine animale" that passed through three set of hands in as many hours.

Religious excitement is prevalent here; converts rapidly coming in to the Society of Friends, and other societies are working with a will. This topic is discussed on the streets, and in the stores, for "When Greek meets Greek, then comes the tug of war."

The Voice of the People on Wine.

It is a well known fact that wines above all other liquors are grossly adulterated, but when a pure article is placed on the market and people find it out to be pure, they all with one voice recommend it. The Port Grape Wine from the vineyards of Alfred Speer, of Passaic, N. J., has received the unqualified endorsement of the medical faculty and of thousands of invalids who have been won back to health by their use. For sale by druggists.

The world-wide reputation of Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the natural result of its value as a blood medicine. Nothing, in the whole pharmacopoeia, effects more astonishing results, in scrofula, rheumatism, general debility, and all forms of blood disease, than this remedy.

HOW CAN PARENTS

allow their children to cough and strain and cough and calmly say: "Oh! it is only a little cold," and keep giving them cheap and dangerous medicines, until they are down with lung fever or consumption, when they can be so easily relieved by BEGGS' CHERRY COUGH SYRUP? It has no superior, and few equals. J. J. Orr, Druggist.

WINDOM'S VISIT TO HARRISON.

He Spends Four Hours in Conference, but Is Mum as to Results.

INDIANAPOLIS, Feb. 18.—When ex-Secretary Windom arrived here Saturday he was met by Private Secretary Halford and taken direct to the Harrison homestead, where he and the president-elect held a private conference of four hours duration. He refused to be interviewed, saying that he was a private citizen, and came and went as he pleased, but he could not talk on the subject desired, as it was not his secret. He did, however, totally repudiate the story printed in these dispatches about his purpose to appoint Judge Devine of Ohio, solicitor of the treasury department as a sort of redemption of a promise of the Garfield administration. It was false, he said, from beginning to end.

Mr. Windom left Gen. Harrison's just in time to catch a train east, and would only say that it was in response to a telegraphic request from Gen. Harrison that he came, and you can emphasize that as you want to. The conference was pleasant and satisfactory. There is nothing more that I can say about it. As to what was said or what was done it is Gen. Harrison's secret."

A telegram from New York states that Windom—just before he left that city for Indianapolis—said, while refusing to deny or affirm that he was to be secretary of the treasury, that when that portfolio was disposed of the cabinet slate would be complete.

It has not yet been definitely decided when the president-elect and his family will leave here for Washington, but they expect to start within the next ten days. Gen. Harrison is looking very well, and his intimate friends say that while the strain upon him since his nomination has been very great, he has been fully equal to the task, and judging from present indications he will enter upon his executive duties in the best of health and spirits. The "Woman's club" of this city has sent invitations to its members for a reception at the New-Denison hotel on Tuesday in honor of Mrs. Harrison and Mrs. McKee, both of whom are members of the organization. It is expected that this will be the last entertainment in which these ladies will participate prior to their departure for the capitah

The Myer-McAuliffe Fight.

NORTH ADDISON, Ind., Feb. 18.—The much-talked of prize fight between Myer and McAuliffe was brought to an abrupt ending Wednesday morning at this place. The men fought sixty-four rounds to a draw, one referee being arrested and fined, and the other being unable to find a place to pull off the fight. The fight lasted four hours and a half, and at the end of that time Referee Mike McDonald called it a draw. The fight was a great disappointment, as the crowd of sports from all over the country who were present had hoped to see a finish fight and get "action" for their money. In fact it was a disappointment all round.

AT THE SCRATCH.

HORSES BURNED TO DEATH.

Ninety-Four Head Cremated, and Their Owner Killed.

KANSAS CITY, Feb. 18.—At 11 o'clock last night fire broke out in the large back barn of J. K. Landis, corner of Tenth and Troost streets, causing the loss of ninety-four head of horses and seventy-five carriages and buggies. J. R. Hoffman, one of the partners, and his family occupied apartments upstairs. They were aroused by the flames and jumped to the street below. Mrs. Hoffman and child reached the ground in safety, but Mr. Hoffmnn fell striking his head against the curbing, knocking him insensible, and he was suffocated before he could be rescued. Loss is estimated at $80,000. Building partially insured. Owing to water mains bursting the fire company were powerless and had to let the barn burn.

Another Record for Le Caron.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 14.—The Star last evening said: Henry Le Caron, the British spy, who has been doing so much swearing in the Parnell investigation, has a war record in America which is spread out on the records of the war department. Before his name is marked "coward and mutineer." He was a member of the famous Company B, Fourteenth Pennsylvania cavalry, which was organized as a body guard to Gen. Thomas, and part of which mutinied when ordered into the fight at Murfreesboro. He was one of the 300 mutineers who were confined in the penitentiary, jail and work-house at Nashville.

OUR NATIONAL LAW-MAKERS.

What They Are Doing for the Country's Good—Bills Passed, Etc.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 14.—The senate yesterday passed the joint resolution authorizing the heirs of Rear Admiral Baldwin to receive a snuff-box set with diamonds from the czar of Russia. The conference report on the diplomatic bill was agreed to, and the house bill granting the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba railway right-of-way through the White Earth Indian reservation was passed. At 12:55 the senate repaired to the hall of the house to witness the count of the electoral vote, and upon returning, resumed consideration of the Texas bulldozing resolution, and Kearts spoke, making a statement of the homicides which brought about the investigation. Cole then obtained the floor, the senate went into executive session, and when the open session was resumed adjourned.

Several pension vetoes were received by the house. The proposed bill to amend the naturalization laws was reported. At 12:55 the senate was announced and the two houses went into joint session to count the electoral votes, and that finished the Smalls-Elliott contested election case was resumed and after an acrimonious debate a vote was reached and Elliott was declared entitled to the seat by a party vote of 143 to 126, except that Wilson of Minnesota, and Russell of Massachusetts voted with the Republicans.

There was a good deal of interest in the formal count of the electoral vote and the house chamber was crowded both on the floor and in the galleries, except the president's and diplomatic galleries. The senate marched into the chamber a minute or two before 1 p. m. Ingalls took his seat at the right of the speaker and presided. The tellers—Senators Manderson and Harris and Representatives Baker and Ermentrout—took their places, and beginning with Alabama the whole list was duly gone through with, and at the conclusion the tellers made the announcement that Harrison and Morton had received 233 and Cleveland and Stevenson 168 votes, whereupon the presiding officer of the senate repeated the announcement that Harrison and Morton were declared elected president and vice-president respectively of the United States for four years from the 4th of March next.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 15.—A resolution for the investigation of the irrigation question by a committee of seven was agreed to by the senate yesterday, and a bill was reported providing that seeds, cuttings, etc., shall be apportioned to the several states in proportion to their representation in congress and sent either to the experiment stations or to the agricultural commissioner in each state. Coke spoke on the Texas election question, declaring the committee report unjust, one sided and partisan. He gave way for some routine business before he concluded his speech. Stewart, Allison, Plumb, Hiscock, Gorman, Reagan and Jones of Arkansas, were made the special committee under the resolution for the investigation of the irrigation question, and after a brief executive session the senate at 5:10 adjourned.

The house passed a bill providing for writs of error to the supreme court in all cases involving the jurisdiction of the court below, and non-concurred in the senate amendments to the legislative appropriation bill. The bill to divide the Sioux reservation and secure one portion for settlement was passed. The conference report on the bill for the admission of south Dakota was called up and the senate amendments non-concurred in, and then a long debate took place on instructions to the conference committee. Finally it was agreed to strike New Mexico out of the bill and to provide for the admission of Dakota by proclamation. An attempt to clinch this action by a motion to reconsider and to lay that motion on the table provoked filibustering, and with the question pending the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 16.—The senate yesterday filed the credentials of W. D. Washburn, senator from Minnesota from March 4 next. A number of bills of little general importance were passed and then forty-one private pension bills, all there were on the calendar, were put through in twelve minutes. Coke continued his speech against the Texas outrages resolution; it was devoted principally to proving the bad reputation of the witnesses who made the charges of bulldozing, etc. He did not finish, but yielded to resolutions in memory of the late Representative Robertson of Louisiana, in eulogy of whom Gibson and others spoke, and the senate as a further mark of respect adjourned.

Mills reported the senate tariff bill back to the house, accompanied by a report and the following resolution: "That the substitution by the senate under the form of an amendment for the bill of the house No. 9,051 (the Mills bill), of another and different bill containing a general revision of the laws imposing import duties and internal taxes, is in conflict with the true intent and purpose of section 7, article 1 of the constitution, and that said bill be returned to the senate with the respectful suggestion that said section vests in the house of representatives the sole power to originate such a measure." McKinley gave notice of a minority report on the constitutional question, and the matter was dropped until Tuesday next when Mills will call it up. The Dakota admission bill came up next. The action taken Thursday was clinched by tabling the motion to reconsider, the vote being 144 yeas to 100 nays. The conferrees were then instructed to agree to the admission of North Dakota, Montana and Washington by proclamation, and the bill was sent to conference. The senate amendments to the fortification and pension bills were non-concurred in, and the bill appropriating $250,000 to enable the president to protect American interests in Panama was passed. In committee of the whole the house then took up the postoffice bill, but on a vote the point of no quorum was raised and the house took recess to 7:30 p. m., at which session thirty three private pension bills were passed, and the house adjourned. The bill for a pension to Mrs. Gen Sheridan was withdrawn, owing to the objection of Kilgore and Cheadle's declaration that it should not pass in the absence of a quorum.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 18.—The senate Saturday passed a bill to place Major James Belger on the retired list as colonel in the regular army. Belger was tried by court martial and acquitted of every charge against him in 1886, but Secretary Stanton summarily dismissed him from the army. The report of the conference committee on the direct tax bill was agreed to. The remainder of the day was occupied by Coke with his speech on the Texas outrage resolutions.

The house agreed to the conference report on the diplomatic bill. Bills to reduce the tariff were presented from the ways and means committee (two), and from the appropriations committee. The first two are on the lines of the Mills bill, with a few changes, and the next is the Cowles bill, which abolishes taxes on tobacco and cigars. In committee of the whole the house then considered the postoffice appropriation bill. An amendment was adopted providing that the aggregate salaries for postoffice clerks shall not exceed the sum fixed in the bill—$6,550,000—and all attempts to increase the sum were defeated. Pending a vote on the proposition to strike out the clause relative to assistant postmasters the house adjourned.

Opened Their Letters

The Length to Which Tory Espionage Can Go.

TAMPERING WITH THE MAILS NOW.

Parnell's Solicitors Make a Grave Charge Against the Government—Parnell's Alleged Letters in Court—The Council Enjoying Their Free Cut—Cabinet Secrets—Sexton Will Sue a Leeds Newspaper—A Rumor About Bismarck.

LONDON, Feb. 15.—The firm of Lewis & Lewis, solicitors for the Parnellites, are indignant over a discovery which was made yesterday, and which gives evidence that the government are doing all in their power to embarrass Parnell and his associates in their struggle to clear their names from crime before the special commission. The letters addressed to these solicitors show by their condition when received that they have been tampered with in transit. The letters bear marks of having been opened and resealed, especially those from the firm's agents in Ireland. The espionage which the government's detectives have exercised over the firm's affairs since they undertook the Parnellite business, though excessively galling, has hitherto been conducted with such secrecy that open notice could not be taken of the annoyance. Tampering with mail matter, however, is a serious offense, and the solicitors propose to have the affair investigated. The letters will be submitted to the commission and justice demanted.

THOSE PARNELL LETTERS.

Five of Them Before the Commission—Expenses of the Times.

LONDON, Feb. 15.—The witness before the Parnell commission yesterday was The Times Solicitor Soames, who produced five of the alleged Parnell letters. He said they had been submitted to experts with specimens of Parnell's handwriting from other sources. He had also came across letters from Egan (three of which had been found at the house of Carey, one of the conspirators implicated in the assassination of Trevelyan and Burke); two letters from Parnell's secretary had also been found at Carey's house. The letters were mostly obtained from a man named Pigott.

On cross-examination Mr. Soames said that he was not consulted concerning the publication of the articles on "Parnellism and Crime." These articles were prepared by a gentleman on the Times' staff, who was assisted by a man named Flanagan, the son of an Irish judge. The witness stated that in all, seventeen letters had been obtained from Pigott, including letters written by Egan, O'Kelly and Davitt. He did not know the precise amount paid for them by the Times. The witness said he had first paid Secretary Houston £1,000 and his expenses to America and those of his assistants. Afterward he had paid Houston sums aggregating £1,500. He had paid Moser £2,000; Kirbly, £250; Thompson, £300.

Pigott, from whom Solicitor Soames testified The Times obtained the alleged Parnell letters, is a Roman Catholic. He was formerly proprietor of a newspaper which was published in Dublin at the same office at which The United Ireland is published now. When Pigott's paper ceased issuing, United Ireland began publishing.

No Occasion for Surprise.

PARIS, Feb. 15.—The chamber of deputies yesterday refused to debate the question of revision of the constitution when asked by the ministry, and the result was a resignation of the cabinet, a move that caused much surprise. After the adjournment of the chamber the Radical left sent delegates to Floquet expressing regret for the action taken. No one has yet been called upon to form a new ministry. Gen. Boulanger has issued a manifesto to the electors of the Seine, claiming the credit of overthrowing the Floquet regime. During the debate the chamber was crowded. The prince of Wales and Lord Lytton, the British ambassador, occupied seats in the diplomatic gallery.

Sued for Libel by Sexton.

LONDON, Feb. 15.—Thomas Sexton, lord mayor of Dublin, has decided to bring a suit for libel against The Leeds Daily News for a recent publication referring to Le Caron's testimony before the Parnell commission. On the strength of Le Caron's statement that Sexton aided Brennan to fly to France, the paper accused Sexton of assisting prisoners to escape from justice, and to cheat the gallows of its rightful victims. Mr. Sexton denied that he assisted in Brennan's escape, but the Leeds paper made no announcement of the denial.

Rumor That Bismarck Has Resigned.

BERLIN, Feb. 15.—A rumor that Prince Bismarck had resigned the chancellorship caused prices to weaken slightly toward the close of yesterday's session of the boerse. Operators, however, attached small credence to the report, which is totally discredited in official circles.

A FRIGHTFUL DEED OF BLOOD.

F. L. Silvers, a Michigan Horse Trader, Annihilates His Family and Himself.

DETROIT, Mich., Feb. 18.—A Free Press special from Tecumseh, Mich., says: A shocking tragedy occurred in this village Saturday night, by which a whole family was wiped out of existence. Frank L. Silvers, a well-known horse breeder, shot his wife and two daughters, Edith and Ada, aged 11 and 9 respectively, and then ended his awful act by shooting himself. The bodies were found yesterday morning by neighbors, who, noticing that the curtains were down and failing to arouse any one, forced open a door. In the parlor lay the body of Mrs. Silvers, fully dressed. The bodies of the children were found in bed upstairs, and in the same room, on the floor, lay Silvers, weltering in blood and still breathing. Every one of the victims had been shot through the temple, and with the exception of Silvers himself, death was probably instantaneous. He is still alive, but unconscious, and cannot live. There is no known cause for the deed. Silvers was apparently in prosperous circumstances, and his relations with his family were pleasant.

Thought He Was Harrigan.

"How do you do, Mr. Harrigan?" was the salutation Deposition Clerk Ryan, of the Buffalo police court, received here one evening.

"Very well," replied Mr. Ryan, who did not exactly get there with the meaning why he should be addressed as "Mr. Harrigan." Presuming he was being "guyed," he stood up to it.

"Brought your company with you?" queried the new found friend of Mr. Ryan.

"Partly."

"When did you see Tony Hart last?"

"Oh! only a short time ago," replied Mr. Ryan, who by this time was drinking a small bottle at the expense of his friend, and helping himself to 2½ cent Havanas.

"Been a good season?"

"Fair," answered Ryan, as another small bottle was uncorked.

"Where do you open next?"

"In the United States court here in Albany," replied Ryan, as he coolly knocked the ashes from his cigar.

"In a court, Harrigan! Are you crazy?"

"Not a bit of it. You are 'off,' my friend. I am not Ned Harrigan, but his double, and as for Tony Hart, don't know such a man. But who are you?"

"Hallen, of Hallen & Hart's combination, which is playing here this week. But who are you?" was the astonished inquiry.

"Eugene Junius Ryan, of Buffalo, sir. Here is my card. If you ever get locked up in Buffalo depend upon me to help you out."

More bottle. More cigars all around. Then Tony Hart came in. Looking squarely at Ryan, he said: "Well, I would swear that you were Ned Harrigan."—Albany Cor. Buffalo News.

Literally Sat on Him.

One of the most absent minded men in this city is a popular clergyman. He was at one time riding in a street car with his wife, when he became interested in a conversation carried on by two gentlemen opposite. That side of the car was packed full of male passengers. Wishing to join in the conversation, the reverend gentleman crossed to the speakers, and, sitting down deliberately in the lap of a man who had not time to move, began an animated discussion. The unfortunate and nearly crushed passenger edged himself out gradually, without being noticed, and stood up the rest of the way. At another time, and that very recently, the same clergyman was reciting the burial service at a funeral. His eyes were closed, although he had the open prayer book in his hand, and the people assembled were astonished to hear him say: "I now charge ye both"— He had lapsed into the marriage ceremony by a trick of memory.—Detroit Free Press.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in lining membranes of the nose and eustachin tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proven this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. DIXON & SON, 303 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

The Fool and the Gun.

MAZEPPA, Minn., Feb. 14.—A son of J. Ihrke, living four miles south of this place, was shot in the head by a young man named Wallrick, Monday, the discharge entering the forehead and coming out at the top of his head. It seems that young Ihrke had been jesting with Wallrick, and Wallrick, picking up a shotgun which stood near, said: "If you don't quit I will shoot you." Before Ihrke could speak, Wallrick discharged it, not knowing it was loaded. Ihrke, at last accounts, was still alive, but there is little hope of his recovery. No arrest has been made, as the young men were fast friends. Ihrke is 16 years of age and Wallrick 21.

Will Try the Iowa Schedule.

DES MOINES, Ia., Feb. 18.—President Perkins and Solicitor Blythe, of the Burlington, Judge Hubbard, of the Northwestern, and Bird and Fish of the Milwaukee road, appeared before the Iowa railway commissioners Saturday and made a request in general terms for a new schedule of rates which shall be higher than that recently adopted and now in force. These representations were without avail as the commissioners were fully determined to try the Iowa rates first. If they were too low they promised to raise them.

Colman Is Secretary of Agriculture.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 14.—The senate last evening in secret session confirmed the nomination of Norman J. Colman to be secretary of agriculture. A number of postmasters were confirmed also, and Ira M. Krutz, of Indianapolis, to be register of the land office at North Yakima, W. T.

HOME.

A man can build a mansion
And furnish it throughout;
A man can build a palace,
With lofty walls and stout;
A man can build a temple,
With high and spacious dome;
But no man in the world can build
That precious thing called Home.

It is the happy faculty
Of woman, far and wide,
To turn a cot or palace
Into something else beside—
Where brothers, sons and husbands, tired,
With willing footsteps come;
A place of rest, where love abounds,
A perfect kingdom—Home.

—London Spectator.

LOVE'S MASQUERADE.

"Aunt Sarah, I have an idea and I want your help to carry it out," said Bob Russell earnestly to Mrs. Briscomb. "I want you to help me to win Gertrude Stone."

"Why, my dear boy," was the reply. "I did not know you had seen her," said the old lady wonderingly.

"Well, my acquaintance with her is rather short, I confess. I only saw her talking with you this morning. I heard her say that if she ever fell in love it would be with a farmer and that she was tired of everything connected with city life. I am unfortunately from the city, but I am going to transform myself into a countryman and hire out as a farm hand to Miss Stone."

And he unfolded his plans for winning the young lady, and had soon enlisted his good natured aunt on his side.

Miss Stone was very much pleased with her new hired hand, Eben, as he called himself. He did not eat with a knife, and his grammar was singularly good for a farm hand.

She did not wonder, when he drove her home one night, that he should talk a good deal, and he was certainly very respectful.

"You are fond of farm work and the country?" Miss Stone was saying.

"Very," Eben rejoined with much enthusiasm.

"You were brought up on a farm?" she added.

"Well, no—not entirely," the hired man responded.

"But you chose farm work because you are fond of it," said Miss Stone warmly. "In that respect we are exactly alike; I love it! I suppose," she added gently, "that you were obliged to choose something?"

"I—yes, I—support myself," Eben responded, with his eyes on his companion's fair face.

"It is nothing to regret—indeed it is not!" Miss Stone declared comfortingly. "I admire anybody who is independent and ambitious; they're the only people I do admire.

"Oh, that is very good in you," the hired man murmured, tucking the robe more closely about her.

"And I suppose you haven't had many advantages?" Miss Stone pursued with sympathetic softness.

"Well, I've had—some schooling," the hired man admitted.

"It isn't so great a loss," said Miss Stone earnestly. "Many of our best and greatest men had very few educational opportunities." It sounded somewhat trite when she had said it; but the hired man was looking at her with warm gratitude. "Nothing is to be regretted but indolence and lack of principle!"

"You are very kind," Eben said in softened tones.

The moon was just rising; the daisies in the fields shone white under it, and the scent of the fresh crops filled the air.

Certainly the hired man was not to be blamed for driving past Miss Stone's gate when they had reached it, with a glance at his companion which was the perfection of respectful deference. All that night she kept dreaming about this nature's nobleman whom she had met, and she thought of going over to Mrs. Briscomb's and telling her what a wonderful man he was.

The next day she asked Eben to drive her over to his aunt's place. Fate must have had something to do with the carriage being upset and Gertrude falling plump into his arms, and then and there he told her how he loved her, and was promptly accepted. "We need only live on the farm in summer," said Eben mysteriously.

"What shall we do winters?" said Miss Stone, wonderingly.

"Well, I've thought of going into the newspaper business," the hired man rejoined lightly.

And she laughed, in fond enjoyment of the joke.

The remark occurred to her three days later. She went into the city to do a little shopping, and to break the news of her engagement to her guardian.

She told herself vehemently that she did not dread the process in the least; she was certain that it would not make the slightest difference what anybody said.

Still she felt a little odd as she walked up the street from the station. The Egberts drove past in their liveried carriage. The newly married and excessively stylish Nicolls met her smilingly. Lottie Hall and her rich young fiance bowed to her from a dog cart. Well, she didn't care what they said; she should marry Eben though the whole world should rise up to oppose it.

It was The Daily Reflector building which put her in mind of Eben's joke about the newspaper business.

The affluent publisher of it stood on the steps, talking to a gentleman. He was an old friend of Miss Stone's, and he hurried down to speak to her.

"In for some shopping?" he said. "By the way, we were just speaking of you. Mr. Russell tells me he has met you. Mr. Russell, here's Miss Stone."

Mr. Russell came down the steps, with his hat raised. He was immaculately arrayed in a pale summer suit, knotty, silver mounted stick, a high hat and polished shoes.

He was in nowise different from the dozens of young men passing at the moment, but Miss Stone stared at him in speechless, motionless bewilderment, and Mr. Russell stared back at her.

It was not till the publisher had bowed himself away that they spoke.

"Eben!" Miss Stone gasped.

"Gertrude!" Mr. Russell rejoined.

He had recovered himself and was smiling down at her.

"I didn't know you were coming today!"

"Who—who are you?" Miss Stone murmured, faintly.

"Well, I'm the young person you're going to marry, for one thing!" the young man responded emphatically, and led her into a neighboring restaurant before saying anything more.

"I couldn't help it!" he declared, breathlessly, over their untouched cream. "I couldn't think of any other way, and I was awfully gone on you from the first minute. It was in the porch that first afternoon. I heard what you said, you know—all about frivolous, flippant minded city men, and I didn't dare to appear in my proper character—I didn't, truly."

His voice shook with something besides feeling, and he put his handkerchief to his lips.

Miss Stone smiled too, helplessly.

"And you—haven't been doing—farm work?" she said.

"Good gracious! I don't know a plow from a reaper," Bob responded. "I've been lying about in Aunt Sarah's front yard when I haven't been with you."

Miss Stone mused, pink and tremulous.

"Where did you get the clothes?" she said.

"Borrowed 'em. I've bought them now, though. I'm going to keep them forever! See here, dear; am I flippant minded? Do you want to bake and milk exclusively? Aren't you rather glad I am not a hired man?"

Miss Stone looked at him with a helpless fondness.

"Well, since it is you!" she confessed, sweetly.

Mine Host and Mark Twain.

Old Mr. A. was once the landlord of a cosy inn, after a certain attractive, old fashioned style, and upon the traveled road between Boston and Hartford. One summer afternoon he was sitting in front of his establishment, when two figures loomed up on the horizon, gradually materializing into human shape as they approached. Both men were well dressed, but one of them limped rather painfully and carried with him an air of being generally fagged out. They stopped at the inn and the limping man asked for a room where he might lie down quietly and refresh himself. On the way up stairs he told the landlord that his companion and himself were walking from Hartford to Boston, and that he was suffering greatly from having walked so far in new shoes. The landlord left his guest and came down stairs, where, after a little conversation with the other pedestrian, he finally remarked:

"Well, a man must be a—— fool to start on such a tramp in new shoes!"

"Do you know who that man is?" remarked the other quietly.

"No," responded the host. "Who is he?"

"That man," replied the other, "is Mark Twain!"

"Mark Twain!" retorted the landlord in astonishment. "Then who the devil are you?"

"I?" said the guest modestly. "Oh, I am Rev. Mr. Twitchell!"—New Haven Palladium.

Robert Collyer and the Old Bell.

Robert Collyer has presented Cornell university with an old bell that has a romantic history, which is retold by the reverend gentleman as follows: "Some years ago the village in which I used to work as a blacksmith was swept away in order that the site might be used as a reservoir for the city of Leeds. In this general destruction the shop in which I worked as a boy perished. Against the old bell that used to wake me up very early in the morning I had a special grudge. At the same time I had so much interest in it that I asked a friend in the town council at Leeds to see that when the bell was broken up for old metal a piece of it should be sent to me as a paper weight. The result was that the town council voted to send me the whole bell. I have ever since been waiting for some appropriate place where it could be put."—Boston Transcript.

A Moral Duly Pointed.

Probably as badly broken up a trio of hunters never went out on a Sunday hunt as were Alva Stuck, George Hadden and Al Carpenter. Either Stuck or Hadden took Carpenter for a rabbit and put a few BB shot through his hat. Stuck lost a $30 watch, then lost a half day Monday trying to find it. Hadden became hungry and ate a lot of frozen apples, which gave him gripes and nearly cost him his life. Another trio went out for a hunt the same day, and the next morning they were arrested for trespassing and fined $6.43 each. One went down on the race to skate, broke through the ice and came near drowning. All this on Sunday.—Otsego (Mich) Cor. Chicago News.

Punishing Quacks.

I was told yesterday of an attempt to tar and feather a mind cure practitioner out west who had been unsuccessful with a patient. I have often thought that if this plan were carried out consistently it would make exciting times among the doctors. If the ghosts of all those people who have been mauled and tortured and finally killed outright by medical experimenters could rise up from their graves what a vast army it would make. It would make the medical students shake right out of their boots. Of course this is not saying anything against the profession, but only those who belong to it, who do not know their business.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

AN AWFUL TRAGEDY

AN ENTIRE FAMILY OF FOUR PERSONS WIPED OUT OF EXISTENCE.

FRANK L. SILVERS, HIS WIFE AND TWO CHILDREN THE VICTIMS.

THEY ARE ALL FOUND IN HIS RESIDENCE ON SUNDAY MORNING LAST—THREE DEAD AND FRANK IN A DYING CONDITION.

Full Details of the Heart Rending Affair—The Testimony Taken at the Coroner's Inquest—Letters Found Which Show that the Act Was Premeditated, but No Clue to the Motive Which Prompted it—The Funeral Services Tuesday.

Last Saturday night a horrible tragedy was enacted in Tecumseh which has never been parelleled in the history of our village, and the like of which we hope it may never be our duty to record again. The scene we are about to describe took place at the residence of Frank L. Silvers. The house which his family has occupied for the past three years, is a neat two story frame cottage, located at the southwest intersection of Evans and Cummins streets, near the crossing of the Lake Shore & Mackinaw railroads. The first residence south, about four rods distant, is occupied by Marshal Thos. Kyle, and the two houses immediately south of Kyle's are the homes of George Keyser and Frank Mann. The target house is directly across Evans street from Silver's home.

Sunday morning about 10:30 o'clock, Mrs. Kyle observed that no one was astir at the Silver's residence and it aroused her suspicions. She insisted upon having her husband go over and see what the cause was, and finally he acceded to her importunities. The back door leading into the kitchen was forced and an awful sight met their view. Officers were summoned at once, physicians were sent for and the prosecuting authorities at Adrian were notified.

Shortly after eleven o'clock the report reached us and a reporter of the HERALD repaired at once to the house. A crowd had already began to gather but only a few were admitted. Marshal Kyle, Deputy Stevens, Dr. Catlin and some of the neighboring ladies had taken possession and were awaiting the coming of the Sheriff and Prosecuting Attorney. By the courtesy of the officers our reporter was permitted to enter, and at that hour, the house remained exactly as it was found. Every article of furniture was untouched. An inspection of the rooms revealed what only twelve short hours before was a cozy and happy home. The table in the dining room was set ready for the Sunday morning meal. To all outward appearances it had been the abode of a model family circle. The rooms were all in neat condition, the pantry and kitchen were as neat as wax, the parlor was tastily and almost elegantly furnished for a house of that size. Frank's coat hung over the back of a chair near the dining room stove. The chairs were scattered about with a free and easy abandon, as they naturally would be when a family retired for the night. The piano was open and a piece of music rested on the rack, entitled "Silver Bell Waltz" on one page of which was the announcement of a new song entitled "Creep into bed, my baby." A book, "Voice of the Home," which Ada had drawn from the Presbyterian Sunday School Library lay on the parlor floor together with some sewing work, near a willow rocker, in which Mrs. Silvers probably sat when she received the fatal ball. On the bed in the rear parlor were a large doll and some doll's clothing, and also some valentines, one of which read

Little one, pretty one,
Gentle as the dove;
May not one to such a one
Send a little love?

On the dining table was a slate, upon which were written some school exercises in a little girls hand. Upon the same table were two letters, one from some friend abroad, and an answer in lead pencil, very nicely written, which ran thus:

TECUMSEH, MICH Feb. 1889.

DEAR BERTHA—I received your letter and was delighted to get it, and will not delay to answer it. We like our new school teacher very much. She is learning us the piece that you and Mattie sang last year. "Why Don't Parents Visit the School?" She has learned us about 10 new songs, they are all very pretty. We miss you very much when we are coming home from school. We don't have any one to walk with us, when we are coming home. I suppose you and Dot have nice times together. I cannot think of any more news to write. Now Bertha you must answer this soon. Good bye.

Yours lovingly,
EDITH SILVERS.

A pencil tablet belonging to Ada lay in one of the parlor rocking chairs. A work basket and sewing materials rested on the parlor table, with a few choice books, and on a marble top light stand in another corner was the family Bible.

Where were the inmates of this pleasant home?

Mrs. Silvers' lifeless body lay on the parlor floor near the stove. She was fully dressed, with her feet resting against the baseboard of the wall. Upstairs were two bed rooms unused and two furnished. In one of these were two beds. The two little girls Edith and Ada lay in one of them, white and cold as marble statues, and at the foot of this bed, on the floor, was Frank's prostrate form, still breathing but unconscious. A six-shooter was laying at his side with four empty chambers.

By noon the news of the terrible affair had been scattered through the village and large crowds gathered about the house, but no one was admitted except a few near neighbors and the officers in charge. At three o'clock Prosecuting Attorney Morgan accompanied by Marshal Ferguson and Ex-Sheriff Whitmore arrived from Adrian, and Justice Davidson acting as coroner, empaneled a jury as follows: Oscar Palmer, James Elliott, E. G. Cook, Geo. Burroughs, E. A. Doke, and H. W. Stevens.

Mrs. Silvers body was examined by the doctors in attendance, in view of the jury, and at the conclusion of the examination the inquest was adjourned until Monday afternoon at two o'clock, at Justice Burridge's office The house was then vacated by the crowd, being left in charge of Mr. Ed. VanDeMark of Clinton, who is a cousin of Mrs. Silvers', but not until a late hour did the excitement abate and people seek the quiet of their homes.

What an awful Sunday it was!

David H. Silvers, of Chicago, was summoned by telegram Sunday noon, and he took the first train leaving that city, and arrived at Britton, on the Wabash about ten o'clock that evening. A conveyance met him there and he was driven to Tecumseh at once, arriving just in time to see his brother Frank alive. Frank peacefully dropped away about one o'clock Monday morning.

The Coroner's Inquest.

At two o'clock Monday afternoon, the inquest was resumed at Esquire Burridge's office, when all the circumstances preceding and attending the affair were brought out in detail. The testimony there given is herewith produced in full as taken by a HERALD reporter.

The first witness was

THOMAS KYLE.

Was in the village Saturday night, between the hours of nine and ten. Not home. Did not know at the time, of any trouble in the Silvers family. Discovered trouble about 10:30 on Sunday morning. My wife mistrusted something wrong because they were not up, as they usually were Sundays. She asked me to go and see if there was anything the matter. I thought not and did not want to bother the neighbors. Mrs. Geo Keyser came over and told me that Frank Mann heard Mrs Silvers scream twice for Frank to come. My wife thought Mrs Silvers might be sick. She would go if I did not. She went over and called up at the window "Mrs. Silvers," two or three times. I told her to come home or she would raise the neighbors. I went over and rapped two or three times and called "Frank!" Got no response. Tried my keys to see if any would fit They would not. My wife said our front door key would fit their back door. Tried it and found it their key in the door on the inside. Jas. E. Lowry took his knife and pushed is out. I turned the bolt with my key but the door would not open. The catch was fastened. I pushed the door in. Went to foot of the stairs and told my wife to go up and see if they were sick, would look better for her to go She went up to the bed-room door and said, "come up, they are all dead." Went up to the door, and in the west bed lay the two girls, and at the foot of the bed lay Mr. Silvers with his feet toward the east laying on his back, with a revolver near his left hand. He was breathing My wife said, "I wonder where Mrs. Silvers is?" We looked in the rooms on the same floor but could not find her. My wife went down stairs and found her by the stove in the front room, her head to the east, her face and head covered with blood. I sent for the doctor and also Mr. Burridge.

FRANK MANN.

Reside in Tecumseh, 3d house south of Mr. Silvers. Was going down town a few minutes before nine. Heard a noise when going by the residence of Mr. Silvers. Had started down to get my wife a pair of shoes. When in front of Silvers I heard somebody crying. Thought it was Mrs. Silvers. She cried hard at times and then she would call to Frank to come to her. I waited a minute in front of the house, and every time she would call she would burst out crying, saying, "oh, dear!" I thought they were quarreling or having words, therefore did not wait in front of the house. When I came back from down town, a little after nine, and in front of Mr. Silvers, I walked slow to see if I could hear any more crying. Did not hear anything more. Could not say as to a light, blinds all closed. When I got home Mrs. Keyser was there. I said to her "I wonder what the matter is down to Silvers. She was crying and calling for Frank." We thought they were quarreling, and paid no more attention to it. Next morning I was out in the back yard and see Mr. Kyle at Silvers'. Went over there soon after he got to the house, and went in shortly after they did. (Here Mr. Kyle's statement was read and corroborated by Mann.)

MISS INEZ FITZGERALD.

Was in my father's house between the hours of 9 and 10 Saturday evening. Heard pistol shots between the hours of 8 and 9, before father got home. Came from direction of Silvers' house. Heard only two shots fired one after another from one-half to one minute apart.

JAMES E. LOWRY.

Reside in Tecumseh. Was at Silvers' at 10:30. Was out taking a walk. When I reached Silvers' house, see Mr. Kyle's wife. Asked what was the matter. She told me the people had not got up yet. Tried with Mr. Kyle to open the door. Mr. Lowry corroborated Kyle's testimony.

S. W. BORDINE.

Reside in Tecumseh, one of the firm of Whitenack, Bordine & Co. Acquainted with Frank Silvers. He was in my store Saturday morning at quarter to 12. Came in, as he does nearly every day. Comes in and talks a little. When he came in Saturday I was working at back end of the store. He stepped up to the show case in front end of the store, stood a few minutes, and finally came back where I was. He spoke to me and said, "Wes, is that a good revolver in that box?" Told him it was a very good one. Asked him if he would like to look at it. Said he would. I passed behind the counter to front of store. Took the revolver out and he stepped behind the counter. Showed him how it worked. He asked the price, and I told him the regular price was $8.50. He said, "What will you let me have it with a box of cartriges for." Told him, "Frank, if you want that revolver and box of cartridges, you may have them for $8. It was a 32 caliber double action revolver." He said he would take it. Started to do them up, but he said he would put them in his pocket. Said he would load it when he got to his office.

Mr. Bordine recognized the revolver found at the Silvers house as the one sold to him. Also identified the balls found on the girls' bed as the ones that would probably fit the revolver if perfect.

Silvers took the revolver and went out.

MRS. GEO KEYSER.

Live second house south of Mr. Silvers. Saw Mr. Silvers about 7 o'clock Saturday evening in the house. He was sitting in a chair asleep. The children were there. Mrs. Silvers was washing dishes. He looked up and said "Good evening, Mrs. Keyser." I remained there 10 or 15 minutes. Was in the room where he was all the time. Mr. Silvers fell asleep and never spoke while I was in the house. Could not tell whether he was asleep or only feigning. Mrs. Silvers said he always slept in his chair. Ada was in a rocking chair asleep. We were talking and said we would like to have her picture while asleep. Edith was writing a letter, and she and her mother came to the door with me when I went home. Might have been 7:30. Was at Mrs. Mann's house when he came home, about 9:30 o'clock. He says "What is the matter at Mr Silvers?" I said, "I guess nothing, they were all well when I was there." He said he heard her call, "Frank, come here." Mr. Silvers had his coat off when in the chair. Know nothing as to their family relations.

Mr. Kyle then read the letter taken from Mr. Silvers' pocket addressed to himself, as follows.

LETTER TO THOS. KYLE.

TECUMSEH, Mich., Feb. 16, 1889.

FRIEND THOMAS:—We ask of you a very unpleasant task. Go to Lester P. Tribou. Give him the combination of the safe. [Here was inclosed the combination.] When open, you will find a letter explaining all.

The keys to the drawers are on my string in the coat.

Thomas, execute my wish, and you shall meet your reward.

FRANK L. SILVERS.

Mr. Kyle said the lamp was burning in the morning, when he went upstairs, a fact he forgot to state before.

After finding the above letter, he came down town with Henry Stevens and Sheriff Baldwin and found L. P. Tribou. We went back to the office, opened the safe and found the letter lying there plainly. It was directed to Lester P. Tribou and Thomas Kyle, and read as follows:

LETTER FOUND IN THE SAFE.

TECUMSEH, LENAWEE CO., MICH., February 16, 1889.

TO LESTER P. TRIBOU AND THOMAS KYLE—Myself and family are going to take a trip, and we wish your assistance in disposing of our earthly accumulations.

Through industry and economy we have bunched a small pittance, which we claim the right to dispose of as we see fit, namely, real and personal property.

Now dear friends, we want you to do just as directed, regardless of public opinion.

Tom, get George Snell to come and take charge of the studs and colts, just to see that they have good and proper care until sold. Give him $15 per week. Irve Vescelius can do the work for him at $5 per week. The man at the farm will take good care of the mares for $3 per week. I want you to advertise in the daily, both Evening News and Free Press. Have the sale of personal property two weeks from Saturday. Give full breeding of stallions and colts, no matter what it costs. Whoever gets them will get two of the best studs in Southern Michigan. Sell everything, no matter how low it goes. Have B. F. Reynolds sell them. Get out a flaming hand-bill. They are worthy of it. Pay all my debts in full. We want no person to lose a cent by us. You can take more time to dispose of the real estate; say by July 1, 1889. Sell everything except my household furniture, and my wife and children's effects, namely: clothes, jewelry, watches, etc., which give to her father.

People who bred to the stallion in 1888, and their mares did not get in foal, return their notes to them. You will find the address of parties' notes I hold, in stallion book of corresponding year. The little brown book, with the notes, are men we neglected to get their notes. Treat them just as though the notes were here. The number indicates the number of mares bred. Justice to all men.

Boys, I want you to dispose of my effects just as stated herein, after our debts and yourselves are paid. Pay yourselves well for all trouble, this being a very unpleasant duty. But you are my selection for the unpleasant duty. The balance of the money buy a good lot in the cemetery. Have McCowen do the undertaking. With the balance of the money we want you to purchase a monument, and erect it on the lot. Fix the lot up in good shape. Have the monument of granite stone, same as Brewer's. No inscription, except names, age, birth, etc. Hoping this will meet your approval; also hoping for a speedy settlement of my affairs.

We don't want any funeral. Just a few remarks by the Rev. Getchell, Universalist minister.

Boys, there will be a great many questions asked in regard to us. Tell them they know as much as you about it.

You know us as well as any one, and the whole thing is a mystery.

That solves the problem for us all.

Our kindest regards to our friends. But of our enemies we ask no favors, as of yore.

Hoping this will meet your approval, we remain as ever,

FRANK L. SILVERS AND FAMILY.
Feb 16, 1889.

DR. S. CATLIN.

About 11 o'clock Sunday morning Jas. E. Lowry came to my house and told me to go to Silvers', they are all dead with coal gas or something else. Went over there into the back door of the house. In the east room down stairs Mrs. Silvers lay on the floor near the stove, her head toward the east. I raised the cloth laying over her face, and found she was dead. Appeared to have been dead for some time. Just at that time someone said let's go up stairs. I put back the cover, went up stairs. Mr. Silvers lay at the foot of the bed, in northwest corner of the room laying on his back, his head near the bed, in quite a pool of blood. I see at once his pulse was very low. Found he had a bullet hole in right temple near the eye. Placing my hand on the other side, found evidence of fracture of the brain, showing the course of the ball. He was in a condition—that of no intelligence. I left him and went to the children. Each of them had a bullet hole in the right temple. Many citizens had come in and I sent for help. Dr Jenkins came and remained till the inquest. The post mortem was held on Mrs. Silvers. On examination we found the bullet had entered the right temple. We could find no exit of the bullet. The left eye and part of face was very much swollen We removed the scalp, traced the bullet through its course and found it had passed behind the left eye. The bullet was not found. After finishing the post mortem we went to the children and found that the bullets in each of them had entered the right temple—not a difference of half an inch in the location of both. Both bullets were found in the bed. The revolver I took the liberty to give to H. W. Stevens for reasons I would not like to give. Found no evidence of violence about the woman except what I have described. Saw her at 11 o'clock. She had been dead long enough so that the blood showed evidence of decomposition. She had been dead evidently some hours, and also the children, for the reason that the blood was changed, and it would take several hours to cause it. It was a relief to me when we found evidence of those pistol shots having been fired between the hours of 8 and 9 o'clock.

The Doctor then gave his hypothesis of the case, which was not taken down in the evidence.

If Mrs. Silvers was shot at 9 or 9:30 o'clock, 12 hours would have passed and two hours more to eleven o'clock when I saw her, consequently she must have had time to be shot, and time to pass away, for she was cold in death when I saw her. I do not know of any way of determining if their death was instantaneous. With the children there were evidences that they breathed for some time. Giving him time to shoot them, if he saw them die he must have shot himself early in the morning, which would when I saw him make the 12 or 15 hours. My inference is he did not shoot himself until morning.

DR. JENKINS

I agree with the above statement. In looking for the bullet in Mr. Silvers' case we removed a portion of the cranium as well the scalp, which Dr. Catlin omitted to tell. The place of entrance and exit exactly coincide with my views.

LESTER P. TRIBOU.

Am acquainted with handwriting of Frank L. Silvers. Have been doing business with him continually. (Handing him the letter wrote to him.) Should say that was the writing of Frank L. Silvers. Noticed nothing unusual about him lately. Know nothing about his affairs that would be likely to throw any light upon the cause for the action.

H. W. STEVENS.

I have the revolver referred to. This is the one. I picked it up by Frank L. Silvers' body and the one bought at Whitenack, Bordine & Co's. On examining it at the time I picked it up, four chambers were empty and two were loaded. At the same time I took this watch which had been taken from the person of Frank L. Silvers. As Dr. Catlin and myself turned the bodies over, we found these two bullets, one laying at the head of the oldest, and one at the head of the youngest daughter. In my judgment they are the same caliber as the revolver. Had made dilligent search for the ball that went through the body of Mrs. Silvers, but could not find it.

Thos. Kyle said that at times Silvers would talk as if his business did not suit him. He talked of moving out on his farm Saturday. He called me in about 6 p.m. He says: "The place for me is on the farm and I am going to talk it over with my wife." When I got home I told my wife. She thought Mrs. Silvers did not want to go on the farm, as she wished to educate the children. He was a self-willed man, but used good judgement with his temper. He said he was not making as much money as he ought, and was not worth as much as people thought.

The jury went out, but returned immediately and gave their verdict. The substance of which:

It is the decision of the jury that Mrs. Silvers and two daughters, and Frank L. Silvers came to their death by shots from a revolver in the hands of Frank L. Silvers, and fired by him.

Many strange rumors were afloat before the inquest was held, and some incorrect reports. But the evidence elicited at that time gave all the details connected with the affair, which can be relied uponas accurate. We prefer giving the facts in this form and omit informal interviews with neighbors and sensational imaginings.

The Funeral Obsequies.

The last act in this terrible tragedy was enacted Tuesday afternoon in the observance of the funeral rites. The hour appointed was at two o'clock P. M., but long before that time crowds of people were gathering at the residence, and persons came here from all the surrounding towns to witness the obsequies. It was impossible to accommodate a tithe of the number in the house and hundreds went there, viewed the remains, and then returned up town or to the neighboring houses. The four caskets were placed in the parlor—Frank and Josie side by side in black covered coffins, and Edith and Ada in white caskets side by side, at the heads of their father and mother. The little girls were laid out in snowy white and their coffins were covered with beautiful flowers. It was a heart rending scene. Strong men and matrons who had buffetted the trials and sorrows of life, broke down in tears. The services were brief—a short scripture lesson was read, Rev. W. H. Babbitt followed with an eloquent prayer that touched all hearts, and Rev. J. M. Getchell, in accordance with the request in Frank's last letter, delivered a short funeral address, which was exceedingly appropriate to the occasion.

Four hearses were arranged abreast on Evans street. The outside one received the father's remains, and the next three the mother, Edith and Ada in turn. The following persons officiated as pall bearers.

For Frank and Josie—Bert Garlinghouse, S. W. Bordine, H. B. Stout, Fred Rosacrans, Fred B. Wood, J. J. Freeman.

For Edith and Ada—Claude Van Tine, Fred Tiffany, Al. Heesen, Roy DeWolf, Bert Baker, Lelma Stewart.

The procession was in charge of Lucius Lilley, assisted by officers Stevens and Kyle. The undertaking, as requested in Frank's letter, was under the direction of Wm. McCowen. The procession was a lengthy one and when formed it wended its way to the cemetery where the four caskets were placed in the receiving vault, where they will rest for a time until the relatives shall decide on their final disposition.

The following friends from abroad were in attendance at the funeral—Benj. Shepard and son Geo. of Phelps, N. Y., the father and brother of Mrs. Silvers; David H. Silvers of Chicago, Benj. Silvers of Albion; Edward Silvers and wife of Pittsford, brothers of Frank; Eli Westfall, an uncle of Mr. Silvers, and grandson of Hillsdale; Mr. Geo. Sisson, Geo. V. Sisson and wife, Benj. Sisson, E. K. Bliss of Deerfield; Geo. A. Kies and wife of Elkhart; A. B. VanDeMark and wife, Ed. VanDeMark and wife, W. D. VanTyle and wife, Dow Draper and wife, John Hause, Jr., and wife of Clinton. These were all relatives or intimate friends of the family.

The Silvers Family.

Frank L. Silvers was born in the present town of Clinton, formerly Tecumseh, Nov. 22, 1849.

Josephine Shepard, his wife, was born at Phelps, N. Y., Dec. 30, 1850.

Edith Josephine and Ada Frank were born in Clinton, April 13, 1878 and February 15, 1880 respectively.

The parents were married at Phelps, Ontario Co., N. Y., Oct. 31st, 1876. A few months prior to this, Miss Josie Shepard came to Clinton to visit her cousins, the VanDeMarks, where she first met Frank, and the acquaintance thus formed soon ripened into an attachment which led to their marriage. The family lived in Clinton until 1882 when they moved to Tecumseh and this village has since been their home. So far as their nearest friends and neighbors know the alliance has been a very congenial and happy one. Mrs. Silvers was a faithful wife and mother and took much pride in training up her daughters aright. They were regular attendants at school, and a piano had been provided to insure their musical education. They were both members of the Presbyterian Sunday School.

Frank's father—John P. Silvers—was one of the pioneers of this county. He purchased 204 acres of land on sections eight and nine, in Clinton, in 1833, and resided on the same farm until his death, a few years since. Frank was one of seven children by his second wife. The elder Silvers was several times elected Supervisor of Tecumseh and served several terms as Justice of the Peace and collector. The family was regarded as one of the wealthiest and most respectable in this section of the county. Fifteen children were born to John P. Silvers, most of whom grew to man's estate and became estimable citizens. No occurrence hitherto has ever tarnished the name or reputation of any member of the family. Josephine has a father and four brothers now living at Phelps, N. Y.

Since Frank's removal to Tecumseh he has been evidently prospering in business. He owned the celebrated horses Banker Rothschilds and Bulletin, the "L" stables in Tecumseh, and an eighty acre farm in Raisin. He had an ambition to build up a big stock farm, on the Kentucky plan, and he certainly had made a very propitious start in that direction. He possessed good business capacity and apparently enjoyed excellent physical health. He was ordinarily rather jovial in disposition and very friendly with his intimates, although he was sometimes afflicted with the "blues" and at these times he was moody and reticent.

What Was the Motive?

Ah! what could have been Frank's motive that impelled him to this awful deed! All the information that can be gathered shows that he led a happy domestic life. His business affairs were in a prosperous condition. He seemed to be devoted to his wife and children. He was not a dissipated man, and was not addicted to the use of either liquor or tobacco. His evenings were generally spent at home in the family circle. His wife was a model housekeeper and a favorite among her acquaintances. His little girls were beautiful children and bright scholars, their mother's pride and their father's joy. One theory has been advanced which may possibly have a semblance of truth. Frank himself was a man of strong feelings and possessed an unyielding will. Josie's mother died in an insane asylum. The presentiment may have seized Frank that Josie and his two bright children were foredoomed to a similar end. It may have wrought upon his mind to such an extent that in the agony of despair he resolved to forestall fate with his own hand. Having made the resolve he possessed the will to execute it. And yet, this is mere theory. No human being can solve the terrible riddle. The All-Wise One alone can penetrate the veil. As Frank said in his farewell missive: "The whole thing is a mystery; that solves the problem for us all."

A NEW BOOK.

Mr. Lewis McLouth of Adrian, will be in Tecumseh, Friday and Saturday of this week, to canvass for the new work, "Forging his Chains." It is a book of thrilling interest and is finding an extensive sale wherever it has been been introduced. We commend Mr. McLouth to the favorable consideration of our citizens. The following testimonial will show what good judges think of the work.

ADRIAN, Mich., Nov 29, '88.

FRIEND LEWIS F. MCLOUTH:—You have asked me to express my opinion of Geo. Bidwell's narrative, a book entitled "Forging His Chains." I have read the same with interest and believe that any person so doing will not only be interested but instructed, especially regarding crime and penal servitude in England. The work is a stern verification of the old adage that "murder will out," and the terrible punishment meted out to Bidwell and his associates, exemplifies the fact that crime and evil doers live in an atmosphere of apprehensive doubt and are of all men the most miserable. In this it points a moral. Truly Yours

V. A. BAKER.

Do your duty, have a good time, aid a worthy charity. Come to the Opera House and witness a good play Tuesday eve. Feb. 26.

On Saturday morning last Margaret, infant daughter of Rev. Chas. A. Fulton, of Norristown, Pa., died at the residence of her grandparents, Dr. and Mrs. S. J. Fulton in this village, aged 6 months The motner, it will be remembered, died at Norristown a few months since, and later the child was brought her where it has been tenderly cared for. The father is now on a voyage to Trinidad with his invalid brother, Dr. Fred S. Fulton. Brief funeral services were held Sunday evening by Rev. W. G. Partridge, assisted by Rev. A. J. Van Cleft. Miss Ella J. Fulton left on the 10:16 p.m. train via. the D. L. & W. with the remains, for Norristown, where the interment took place.—Chenango Union, Norwich, N. Y., Feb. 7.

Would you not like to be transported to New York City some bright Sunday morning and make a round of the different places of worship, and see just how New Yorkers worship, from the Protestants to the Jews? To get an idea of them all, taking in the Catholics and the Christian Scientists, would require many Sundays, but Demorest's Monthly Magazine for March (just received) has simplified matters by bringing "Religious New York" to us, and illustrating the article so beautifully and profusely that a stranger can get more information from it than could be gained by twenty Sunday visits. Published by W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. Price 20 cents.

George Larwell's new story in the Evening News grows more interesting as it proceeds. From this synopsis of the first nine chapters one can imagine how the tale opens:

Capt. Tafrel a young skipper, who had been trained under the most daring navigators found himself, in 1850, in New York harbor, in charge of the schooner yacht Oriole, a trimly-built boat, whose purpose was a mystery. The slave trade was then being attacked in the West Indies. The decreased facility in landing slaves made the business one in which the increased risk was more than compensated by the increased profit. There was much suspicion that the Oriole's commission was that of a slaver. Tafrel gave out that she was to be used in the fruit trade. Two jolly tars discussed it in a New York taproom, agreed that she was to be a slaver, and were overheard by Mr. Padit, reporter of the Morning Triphammer, abolitionist organ. Next day the Triphammer had a sensational story that New York harbor was the rendezvous of slave traders, and the departure of the Oriole had consequently to be hastened.

The Detroit Free Press and Evening News both sent staff-reporters to Tecumseh last Monday to look up the details of the Silvers tragedy.

Mrs. Nellie V. Anderson gave a lecture on Christian Science at the opera house house yesterday afternoon to a fair audience. Those in attendance speak in warmest terms of praise of the lecture.

The Prohibitionists of this village will hold a caucus at the council room on Monday evening, Feb. 25th, at 7:30, to nominate candidates for the village officers to be elected at the coming annual election, to be held March 4th, 1889. By Order of Com.

The Ida VanCortland Co., played to fair houses on Monday and Tuesday. The unpropitious weather and the excitement in town over the Silvers affair doubtless interfered seriously with the attendance. The troupe is a first-class one and much above the average of traveling companies. They are playing to crowded houses elsewhere.

Mrs. Wm. P. Smallidge departed this life last Friday, after a serious illness of several days. The funeral services were held last Sunday afternoon, under the auspices of Beers' Post G. A. R. and were attended by a large concourse of sympathizing friends. An obituary notice will appear in our next issue.

Miss Clara May Harkness and Herbert Temple, of St. Paul, were married last night at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. S. Harkness 2918 Ceder Street. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. E. G. Richardson, of St. James' Church. J. H. McMorrow, of Minneapolis, Miss Bessie Harkness and Miss, Matie Rogers, sister and cousin of the bride, attended the couple. The marriage was witnessed only by the relatives and intimate friends of the bride and groom. A largely attended reception followed the cermony. Mr. and Mrs. Temple will reside in St. Paul.

The above notice is clipped from the Evening Wisconsin of Feb 14th, recording the marriage of our whilom friend H. M. Temple. May prosperity attend the happy couple.

THE OLD FOLKS PARTY.

The Old Folks of this town danced last Friday night. Yes, and a good many of the young folks too. The committees in charge had been there before and the affair was well advertised. A large gathering and a most enjoyable dance was the result. The music by Hunt's orchestra was fully up to the usual standard and gave unqualified satisfaction, although John VanVleet allowed that the Devils Dream ought to have been in their repertoire. All of the old style figures, such as Opera Reel, Money Musk, French Four, Cecilian Circle and many others were on the program. In these changes the old dancers were at home of course, while the younger portion of the company soon caught on, and entered into the spirit of "Ye olden time" right heartily. Socially considered the party over flowed with good nature and enjoyment. At ten o'clock about eighty couples were on the floor, and both old and young sailed in for a good old fashioned time. Many were present from Adrian and Clinton, while the towns adiacent to Tecumseh all furnished their quota. The galleries were well filled with spectators nearly all of whom remained until the supper hour arrived. Refreshments were served at both Marsden's and VanAntwerps where all were foountifully supplied. P. J. Farley and Jno VanVleet went through the French Four like veterans. P. W. Adams and Jim Aten were boys again in Money Musk. Met Conking and Dick Gillespee reeled off the Opera Reel like a pioneer ofthe thirties. E. C. VanVleet and Jim Patterson were right at home in the Cicilian Circle. D. W. Clark didn't dance except by proxy. Fred Rosancrans and John Freeman were there to watch Gus Wright and Lester Tribou. Ben Garlinghouse and Charley Patterson were there because they were on the committee. Geo. Wilson was there to keep an eye on Will Hayden and Harry Root. Ell Gray and John Schreder were there to represent the agricultural interests, Deputy Stevens and Marshall Kyle were there to keep the rest of the children straight, while Ex-Sherif Whitmore of Adrian smiled on the entire company the with most genial satisfaction. It was a gay party from the opening set to the close and the most successful social event of the season in Tecumseh.

WEDDING ANNIVERSARY.

In Macon on Jan. 22nd, at the home of their nephew E. M. Camburn was celebrated the fortieth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. B. B. Crittenden.

At an early hour friends from Clinton, Saline, Milan and Tecumseh began to arrive until, at the dinner hour about fifty or more seated themselves at the well filled board, doing ample justice to the bounties spread before them. after which Mr. H. P. Downs, of Clinton. in behalf of all in attendance, presented to those pioneers of to day, the bride and groom of forty years ago, with a substantial gift as a token of loving remembrance from brothers, sisters, nephews, nieces and friends to carry to their western home. Mr. Crittenden responded with a few heartfelt words of thanks. The remainder of the afternoon was most agreeably spent in social converse, vocal and instrumental music, reading letters from absent ones laden with regrets both for the hundreds and thousands of miles that separated them and of love and earnest wishes for many happy returns, and also in recalling those dear ones who have set sail on the great sea of the unknown from which none return.

As a souvenir of the day a photographic group of all present was struck off reminding one of the Voyage of Life, from the gray-headed Grandsire to the tiny infant in his mother's arms.

As the sunset hour drew nigh admonishing of the duties of life one and all separated for their homes with an earnest wish that the afternoon of those two lives that have united and mingled for the past forty years may close with as clear and beautiful a sunset as the one that on that day gilded the western sky.

HIGH SCHOOL HAPPENINGS.

The T. O. C. Club met with Charlie Burridge this week.

The German Club did not meet this week.

There is still considerable doubt as to who T. B. F. is.

The Senors have received their class rings from New York. They are beauties.

We are pleased to see our amiable schoolmate Alice Garlinghouse among us once more. She has been detained from school for a week past by a severe cold.

A singing class of ten members has been organized with Miss. Grayson as teacher. They have petitioned to the School Board to allow them to meet in the A room once a week and are waiting their decision.

FOLDED HANDS.

Pale, withered hands, that more than four score years
Had wrought for others; soothed the hurt or tears,
Rocked children's cradles, eased the fever's smart,
Dropped balm of love in many an aching heart;
Now, stirless folded, like wan rose leaves pressed,
Above the snow and silence of her breast;
In mute appeal they told of labors done,
And well earned rest that came at set of sun.

From the worn brow the lines of care had swept
As if an angel's kiss, the while she slept,
Had smoothed the cobweb wrinkles quite away,
And given back the peace of childhood's day.
And on the lips the faint smile almost said:
"None knows life's secret but the happy dead."
So gazing where she lay we knew that pain
And parting could not cleave her soul again.

And we were sure that they who saw her last
In that dim vista which we call the past,
Who never knew her old and laid aside,
Remembering best the maiden and the bride,
Had sprung to greet her with the olden speech,
The dear sweet names no later love can teach,
And Welcome Home they cried, and grasped her hands:
So dwells the mother in the best of lands.

—Margaret E. Sangster in Christian Intelligencer.

A MOORLAND MAID.

Louis De Mornay was the name of a young Cuban who had lately fallen heir to a large estate. A hunting lodge in Scotland was his favorite home, and he was going out on a hunting expedition alone and unattended. One night, while lost on the moors, he received shelter from a farmer named McGregor, and there saw for the first time the woman who was to sway his destiny.

Marion was just budding into perfect womanhood and beautiful as a dream. The young Cuban fell in love with her at once, and from that time he was a frequent visitor at the McGregor cottage.

De Mornay did not tell Marion of his love, but spoke first privately to her father, willing to abide by the old Scot's decision. McGregor might have felt proud of gaining such a son-in-law, but Marion was all he had in the world.

"My daughter must marry in her own station when the time comes," he said firmly. "You do us honor by your proposal, but the time will come when you will see the folly of such an unseemly union."

De Mornay, true to his word, departed without seeing Marion, and from that day the girl drooped like a flower in the sun.

"I hope you are not moping about that chap who went away," said McGregor, coming upon his daughter one day in tears; "put him out of your thoughts, lass, for he'll never come back. I sent him quick enough about his business."

A sudden joy kindled her pale face.

"Oh, father, did he ask for me? Then heaven be praised! I read his looks and acts aright. Oh," said she, sinking down upon her knees and catching her father's horny hand and kissing it, "I had lost my faith in human nature and you have given it back. Bless you for it. Oh, father, if that face could tell a false story, then the angels themselves would be untrue."

"Calm yourself, Marion," interrupted her father sternly. "Did you not hear me? It's all at an end. You cannot be his bride. It would be like the mating of a crow and a dove."

"I care not, so he loves me," murmured Marion, softly. "Hear my vow," she said, suddenly, and again she sank upon her knees, and raised her pure, childlike, but resolute face to his. "I will never marry Louis de Mornay without your consent, but I will love him my life long, and die a maid for his sake if I cannot be his wife."

It was too late to check her. The vow was taken and would be kept. The strict old father himself would not have dared to ask her to break it.

Matters went on about the same at the farm. Several years passed by, during which Louis was constantly changing his location, as, indeed, it was necessary for him to do to give personal supervision to his various estates.

During this period of unmitigated prosperity to the wealthy young land owner, Farmer McGregor had been gradually but surely going down in the world. A succession of bad crops, a disease among his fine Durhams, until scarcely a poor half dozen was left of his fine herd, and a murrain which proved fatal to the sheep left him at last in a very straightened condition.

Still he had managed to get his rent money together. The pay day was near and the farmer had put the hardly earned money in a leathern wallet preparatory to a start.

"Well, wife, he said, with a sigh, "here's pay for last year. It's main doubtful, though, where the next will come from."

"Keep up, Duncan," was her cheerful answer. "It's all for the best, though one cannot always ken why."

So he started away to the laird's country seat on his stout cob without weapon of defense, for it was a peaceful country and he had no fear of molestation.

But his journey was not half over, when in some lonely woods through which the road ran an escaped convict seized his opportunity and struck him senseless from his horse, rifled his pockets, and mounting, rode rapidly away with his plunder.

About half an hour later he was found by the gamekeeper of an adjoining estate and taken at once to the big house and cared for. The master was away, but the housekeeper was kind and efficient, and under her good offices he soon came to consciousness, but not to the ability to help himself. One blow had fallen upon his shoulder, and it proved to be dislocated. There was no alternative but to remain perhaps for weeks, so Marion was sent for. The day after the young proprietor arrived also. The housekeeper told him at once of his strange guests, and hastened to assure them of his cordial welcome.

As he entered the room Marion rose from beside her father's bedside, and after one surprised glance, held out her hand, her eyes shining like twin stars. It was Louis De Mornay.

His face brightened with a sudden light as he went forward. Taking her two tender hands within his own he turned to the old father.

"See," he said gravely, "it is the will of God that you should give me Marion for my very own. Her steps have been led to my roof tree by the hand of fate. She is to me the most precious treasure in the world. Will you not give her to me?"

The old man looked up into the dark, earnest face. Its expression of sincerity and kindliness could not be misunderstood, and in spite of himself he became for the first time conscious of his noble, manly beauty.

At last he reached out a trembling hand and placed it upon Marion's bright head.

"Take her," he said hoarsely. "It is God's will and the lass loves you. I'm not sure if I would give her up, but the poor bairn might soon be without a sheltering roof tree. The world's not gone well with me of late, young man."

"That is because you slighted love, and the little tyrant is angry," said Louis, playfully, as he turned and looked questioningly into Marion's blushing face.

"Little one, is it true? Do you love me? Look up and tell me."

She tried to raise her blue eyes to meet his, but their radiance was too powerful. Her sweet lips trembled, but before the words came they were drowned in a shower of kisses.

Thus they were betrothed.—Nebraska State Journal.

No Corsets for Girls.

I can point out many ladies of my acquaintance who have never worn corsets, and who neither look limp nor stoop; in fact, I have been particularly struck with the erectness of their carriage. My mother, who is near 60 years of age, is much straighter in the back and shoulders than most of the young ladies whom I know. She never leans back in a chair, and does not appear to need any artificial support whatever. She has never worn corsets for an hour. My opinion is that when a person commences to wear corsets she is far more inclined to stoop than before, and as to the figure, the one without corsets is far more graceful and pleasing to the eye than the hard, bony looking structure we so often meet.

I am very glad the outcry against this article of dress is becoming so decided, and I hope much good will be the result. To put children and growing girls into corsets is simply outrageous. All the young muscles, so delicate and beautiful, should have full play to develop healthily as nature intends them, and not be crushed and confined, as they must be even by the most innocent description of corsets. The more room these growing muscles have, the less deformity there will be, for nature in her healthy development never deforms. Let us allow natural growth, and we shall have healthy and vigorous bodies.—English Correspondent.

Her Kind of Faith.

There, for instance, is that story of the German old maid who had petitioned the authorities to remove a great hill from in front of her house, in order that she might get an unobstructed view of the river Rhine. The authorities were disobliging and pig headed, and wouldn't move the hill. The old maid pleaded, but quite in vain. But she was a pious, Bible reading woman, and a lineal descendant of Martin Luther into the bargain. She remembered the text about the faith that can move mountains, and she resolved to try it on the great, troublesome hill that cut off her view of the beautiful Rhine. She decided upon a night of prayer that the mountain might be removed, with implicit confidence that her prayer would be answered. All night long she wrestled, like Jacob of old. What ecstasies of devotion she passed through no one may know, and to speculate upon them would be profanation. In the morning she rose, with radiant countenance, confidently drew the curtain of her window that looked toward the mountain, staggered back with apparent surprise and exclaimed, "Oond dere it shtands, jusht as I expected!"—Boston Transcript.

A Warm Blooded Empress.

It is said that Queen Victoria is so fond of fresh air that she is in the habit of sleeping with open windows even in the dead of winter, and that during the day time her apartments at Windsor Castle are so cold that her attendants and visitors are almost frozen. The Empress Maria Theresa of Austria was more peculiar in this respect. Her apartments were very rarely heated. She exposed herself to draughts without falling a victim to rheumatism. Her writing table, even in winter, was close to the open window, and the falling snow often drifted into the apartment and fell on the paper on which she wrote. It frequently happened that the hands of the hairdresser were partly frozen while attending to her majesty's coiffure, and that the ladies surrounding her august person literally trembled with cold.—New York Graphic.

To Save Time.

Anything to save time is New York's motto. The newest thing is a shop where men and women may have their shoes mended while they wait. Customers see the latest shoemaking machinery in the window, and behind the machines a row of lasts at which men prepare the work for the machines. A woman goes in, has her shoes taken off, put on the lasts, trimmed of all tatters and shreds, fitted with new heels and soles, put into a sewing or nailing machine and made good as new almost half as quickly as it has taken to write these words. Patching is the only work that is done in the old fashioned way. Entire new shoes are made to order by the pair in two hours.—Detroit Free Press.

Getting Things Mixed.

The general density of what are called our best society circles on points of American literature is illustrated by the personal experience of a lady recently, to whom a young "dude" spoke of "that fellow Stockbridge, you know, who writes those funny things." Repeating this tribute to another group, from whom she hoped to gain a smile, the hostess was met with, "Oh, yes; Stockton, he means—the one that wrote 'The Tiger and the Lily'—didn't he?"—Critic.

Not Their Privilege.

Mills Presents a Constitutional Objection.

TO THE TARIFF BILL OF THE SENATE

He Wants It Returned With the Remark That the Upper House Is Attempting Usurpation—Arguments Against the Bill on Its Merits.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 16.—The report of the ways and means committee on the senate tariff bill was presented to the house yesterday. It begins with a denial of the right of the senate to present such a bill, raising the constitutional point that the bill, as it came from the senate, is a violation of the provisions of the constitution allowing the house of representatives power to originate revenue bills. Therefore the accompanying resolution directs the return of the bill to the senate. A long argument is entered into to prove the alleged unconstitutionality, and the fact is cited that the senate itself decided that it had no power to originate bills reducing or repealing existing taxes, and that when such a bill was sent from the senate in the second session of the Forty-second congress, Dawes, then a member of the house, held the above view, and moved that the bill being unconstitutional lie on the table, and this resolution was voted for by Hoar, Hale, Farwell, Frye, Hawley and Platt.

An argument is then submitted to prove the proposition that "increased importation is always productive of prosperity to the whole country and to all classes of its people." The report says we cannot sell our surplus corn unless we take European surplus in exchange therefor. The committee declares that the years in which importation reached its highest points were the years of the greatest prosperity for this country, and that when importations fell off the times were hard, labor unemployed and capital unproductive. The principle of the senate bill is stated to be that the way to get rid of a surplus in the treasury is, first, to spend it in new channels of appropriation, and if that is not effective then to reduce taxes on those articles that are most productive of revenue and at the same time least to the pockets of the favored classes. In this connection the assertion is made that the tax is taken off sugar because it only gives the producers $6,000,000, while it gives the government $56,000,000, and taxes are retained on wool, cotton, iron and steel products because while they bring to the government only $62,000,000 they put in the pockets of the "favored classes" more than $500,000,000.

To prove the statement that high importations produce prosperity the financial history of the years 1869 to 1873, and 1879 to 1881 is referred to, and to prove that low importations decrease prosperity the history of the years 1873 to 1879 and 1882 to 1885.

It is contended by those who advocate high duties, not for revenue but to restrict importation, that if free importation is allowed the foreign producer will supply all our wants, and our industries will be ruined, our factories closed, and our labor thrown out of employment. This argument is without any foundation in fact. More than 90 per cent. of all the goods we consume are produced at a lower cost in the United States than they are in any foreign country, and no article is ever imported into any country when it can be produced there cheaper than elsewhere.

The finance committee seem alarmed lest India wheat shall be imported into New York, and deprive us of our home market. These fears would be easily dispelled if they would look at the export prices of American and foreign wheat as shown by the last annual report on the foreign commerce of the United States. They would see that wheat is worth more per bushel in India than in the United States, and has been higher every year.

The proposed bounty on sugar is condemned on the ground that any bounty is a disguised raid on the treasury. If the bounty system is to be adopted, however, the committee wants it extended to corn, wheat and other agricultural products.

The committee makes an elaborate argument against the substitution of specific for ad valorem duties, on the ground that the specific tax does not distribute the burdens equally, and on the ground that quantities are fixed while values are constantly changing. It adds the insinuation that the senate committee did not have the special knowledge to arrange the schedules of specific duties, and that they were made by the manufacturers of the articles for their own benefit.

"The treasury experts show that the reduction in the revenue from customs by the senate bill will be about $14,000,000, including the reduction in the free list of $5,828,074.65. When we take into account the value of all sacks, boxes, crates and coverings that are also made dutiable with the articles bearing ad valorem duty, there will be no reduction in customs revenue." In fact the report declares it probable that an increase of about $6,000,000 on taxes is effected by the senate bill, and it closes with the suggestion that through the repeal of the tax on alcohol to be used in the arts the whole tax on whisky may leak away.

THE IOWA RAILWAY LAW.

Prominent Managers State Some of Their Objections to It—A Printing Bill.

CHICAGO, Feb. 14.—Prominent railroad officials in this city state that Judge Brewer's decision which put into effect the Iowa commissioners' schedule of rates has had an extremely demoralizing effect on northwestern traffic. The Iowa roads claim that all their Iowa business is done at a loss, and the adjustment of rates consequent upon the adoption of the new schedule offers many perplexing questions for solution. It is estimated that the one item of additional printing alone will amount to $200,000. The net loss to the railroads owing to the decision will be at least $3,000,000 before next May.

Prohibitionists Adopt Woman Suffrage.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Feb. 16.—The national Prohibition conference met here Wednesday afternoon, with 300 delegates present, including ex-Governor St. John, Rev. Brooks (late party nominee for vice president), Miss Francis Willard, and other leaders. Long discussion sprang up in the afternoon over the woman suffrage question. The majority report on resolutions was against woman suffrage, but a majority report was brought in, and after a sharp fight was adopted.

Capt. Bonfield Resigns.

CHICAGO, Feb. 14.—Police Inspector John Bonfield, who was suspended from duty by the mayor some days since, pending an investigation of the charges brought against him by The Chicago Times, handed his resignation to Mayor Roche yesterday in a caustic letter charging, in effect, that he has been made the victim of the mayor's political aspirations, as his continuance in office would have arrayed the Anarchists, gamblers, etc., against the mayor.

CHRIST AT NAZARETH.

LESSON VIII, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, FEB. 24.

Text of the Lesson, Mark vi. 1-13—Commit Verses, 10-12—Golden Text, Mark vi. 12—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helps Quarterly, by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

1. "And He went out from thence," that is from Capernaum, where He had just healed the woman who had been twelve years sick, the little girl 12 years old who had just died, the two blind men and the dumb demoniac; where, also, he had on previous occasions healed the man in the synagogue with an unclean spirit, Peter's wife's mother, the sick with the palsy, the nobleman's son, the centurion's servant, and many others not mentioned individually. (Mark i, ii, v; Matt. ix; Luke vii; John iv.). How highly privileged Capernaum was, how many mighty works were done there!

"And came into His own country." After the people of Nazareth rejected Him and sought His life, He made Capernaum His home (if He could be said to have a home), and it was called "His own city" (Matt. ix, 1; Luke iv, 16-31); but Nazareth was His own country where he had been brought up. How patient, forgiving, and long suffering He is, and how earnestly he continues to seek those who reject Him, if perchance they may repent; for He is not willing that any should perish. (II Pet. 3-9.)

"His disciples follow Him." Some follow fully and some follow afar off; some seek and serve Him with the whole heart and some do anything but that.

2. "When the Sabbath day was come, He began to teach in the synagogue." He had been at it early and late all the week, teaching, healing and journeying on foot or by boat from place to place; but every Sabbath day is filled also, and it would seem that they were among his busiest days. If we serve Him only on the Sabbath day, or if our work through the week is such that we cannot heartily serve Him even on that day, or if we find the one day given wholly to Him a weariness, is it worth while to call ourselves His followers or profess devotion to Him?

"These things * * * wisdom * * * mighty works." They had to confess that they had never heard such wisdom, nor seen such mighty works, but where He got the wisdom, or how He did the mighty works, they could not tell.

3. "Is not this the carpenter?" They had known Him many years as the carpenter, and the carpenter's son (Matt. xiii. 55); His mother also they knew and His brethren and sisters, and while they could not but wonder at His wisdom and His mighty works, it was too much for them to receive Him of the humble home as their Messiah, and they were offended at Him. Had they considered the facts in connection with His birth in the light of Isa. vii, 14; Hos. xi, 1, or His miracles in the light of Isa. xxxv, 5, 6; or had they observed Isa. liii, 1-3 in reference to their own conduct they might have been convinced, but they heeded not these things, and because He came not as they thought He ought to have come they knew Him not.

4. "A prophet is not without honor, but in his own country, among his own kin, and in his own house." On two other occasions did He speak the same truth (Luke iv. 24; John iv, 44), and John vii, 5, tells us that at one time even His own brethren did not believe in Him.

5. "He could there do no mighty work." With the exception of healing a few sick folk, His power was not manifested in His native town because of their unbelief, Matt. xiii. 58. How gladly He would have healed all their sick, and magnified the name of the Lord among them if they had only received Him; how His heart must have yearned to tell them more fully the good news of the kingdom, but their ears were stopped, and they compelled Him to turn away, and "He marveled because of their unbelief." So long as Israel were separated unto God and believed God, He did wonders for them and among them; but when they turned from Him they ceased to see and know His power. Wherever in the world to-day His power is seen on behalf of His people there is faith in Him at the bottom of it; and where His people, either as churches or individuals, neither enjoy nor see the power of God in holy lives and the salvation of sinners it must be due to a lack of faith in God.

7. "He called unto Him the twelve, and began to send them forth." The praying ones are now going forth to answer their own prayers, and then he sent forth other seventy also, still encouraging them to continue praying for more laborers (Luke x, 1, 2).

8, 9. "Nothing for their journey, * * * no scrip, no bread, no money, no extra coat." They were evidently not on a pleasure tour, nor going to make much out of this financially. They did not take up a collection to defray the expenses of the mission, nor delay their going till the funds were raised, but with the promise that "the workman was worthy of his meat" (Matt. x, 10) they went forth. They were on the King's business, and He would not fail to provide for them by the way nor to recompense them for their work, but they must simply leave all that to Him and fulfill His commands.

10. "In what place soever ye enter into an house, there abide till ye depart from that place." They were not to enter any or every house, but to inquire for a worthy house, and if after entering they should find the house not what it was said to be, they were to leave it. (Matt. x, 11-13.) The follower of Christ is not to expect that either He or His message will be well received by all, nor is he to thrust himself where he is not wanted, nor seek help from those who know not the Lord; but lovingly and patiently is he to go in his Master's name, bearing his Master's message of peace and good will, content to be faithful to him, bearing all things for His sake, and coveting above all things His approval.

11. "More tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of judgment, than for that city." Although this sentence is not in the Revised Version, yet it is found in Matt. x, 15; xi, 24; and shows us the greater responsibility of greater privileges, and how fearful will be the doom of those who refuse to hear or receive the Lord Jesus Christ, or those whom He sends forth as His witnesses.

12. "And they went out and preached that men should repent." Between this verse and the last the whole of Matt. x, 16-42, seems to come in with its warnings, instructions and exhortations to proclaim the truth boldly and to fear no man, nor death itself, but only God.

13. "They cast out many devils, and anointed with oil many that were sick, and healed them." The Lord wrought through them and His name was glorified. His power through them was as if He had been present Himself, and it should be so still; but we must remember that these miracles were tokens of the kingdom then at hand, but now postponed till His return; and yet the apostles continued to work miracles in his name long after he had ascended back to the Father, and if there was more faith and whole hearted separation unto Him now on the part of his followers would be more manifestations of his MATED AT LAST.

She was a little maiden sweet,
Who all her suitors bated;
But, as she grew to years discreet,
Her coldness much abated.

It seemed as if this maiden lone
To single life were fated;
Yet when death claimed her for his own
At length she was cremated.

WHICH 'UN?

There is love on the mountains as well as in the valleys, and that love acts in exactly the same channels. One afternoon, as I was approaching a mountain hamlet called "Herkimer's," I met a young man of about 20, who, as I soon found, had been waiting my coming. He was a typical young mountaineer, but he seemed so embarrassed and flustrated that I almost became suspicious of him. He finally asked me to sit down on a rock by the roadside, and when we were down he said:

"Stranger, I reckon you 'un is to stop in town?"

"Yes."

"You'll go to Bailey's, in course. They hain't nobody else got a spar' bed fur strangers."

"Yes, I was told to go to Bailey's."

"They 'un is expectin' you 'un, and you 'un will be treated handsome."

"Yes."

He moved around nervously, got up and sat down, and when I asked if he had cramps or toothache, he blurted out:

"Stranger, I want to ax a plain question. You 'un won't be mad?"

"Oh, no."

"Hev you 'un cum courtin'?"

"Bless you, no! What put such an idea into your head?"

"Dunno. Ever hear of Betty Bailey?"

"Never."

"No! Why, I thought everybody had. She's 'lasses. Nobody else can compare."

"Ah! I see! You love her and was afraid I'd come to cut you out. Case of jealousy, eh?"

"Stranger, be you 'un mar'd?" he solemnly asked.

"Yes, for the last hundred years. Married and a grandfather. Even if I fell in love with the fair Betty I couldn't marry her."

"Serus?"

"Serious as the grave, my boy. Don't you worry over me. Indeed, if it comes handy I'll put in a good word for you."

"You 'un will chitter (talk) for me!"

"Certainly."

"Put it thar!"

We shook, and then he stood up, scratched his head, looked all around, and finally lowered his voice and said:

"Jim Burton ar' arter her, too! Dog gone him, but he 'lows to cut me out!"

"Oh-ho! Then you have a rival? What sort of a fellow is Jim?"

"Got ten acres, a cabin, a gun, two dogs, and he 'un says he'll hev a mule this fall."

"And what have you got?"

"More'n he 'un, but he's purty to boot."

"I see. Well, you appear to be a good hearted young man, and if I can give you a lift I'm bound to do it. Don't count too much on me, however. Women are strange creatures. I may even hurt your case by trying to help you."

We shook hands and separated, and in due time I reached Bailey's house and was cordially welcomed. I found Betty to be a pretty good looking girl of 18 or 19, unusually talkative and intelligent, but we had scarcely eaten supper when a boy came in and said that a man wanted to see me over at the store. At the gate I encountered a young man who introduced himself as Jim Burton, and added:

"Stranger, would you 'un mind footing it a bit for me?"

"Oh, no. I wanted to smoke, anyhow. Have a cigar? You have something on your mind you want to speak about."

"I—I hev," he replied. "Gwine to stop long at Bailey's?"

"Only a day or two."

"Cum to see—see Bailey?"

"Yes."

"Didn't cum to—to—?"

"To see Betty? Oh, no. Let's see. You must be the young man who is courting her?"

"Cricky! But I am!" he exclaimed, as he clicked his heels together.

"Well, she's a nice, tidy girl, and will make you a good wife. How soon does the marriage come off?"

"Cricky! But I wish it was to-morrer!"

"Is any one else loving her?"

"One more—dog gone his earlocks! If that ar' Tom Wharton don't keep hisself away I'll shufe him!"

I promised to speak a good word for him and went back to the house, and hardly had Mrs. Bailey and I got seated for a smoke when she called:

"You thar, Bet? Cum yere!"

"What is it, mam?"

"Thar's bin too much fussing. I'm goin' to ask the stranger which 'un. Will ye abide?"

Betty blushed and fidgeted and the mother continued:

"I don't believe in fussing. When I was axed if I would marry pop I said 'yes' right off, and thar' wasn't no fussing. Bet has to serious somebody. What d'ye think, stranger?"

"Is she loved by two young men?"

"She are. Kept up a fussing here fur a hull year and hain't said 'yes' to either of 'em."

"But how do I know?" protested the girl.

"How do you know that oxen hev horns? Is one as good as t'other?"

"Pears so."

"Stranger, advise her. Bet's a good girl and will make some man a good wife, but thar's too much fussing. I can't just put up with it no mo'. Bet, will ye abide?"

"Mebbe."

"You'll hev to. He knows. He's cum all the way from the no'th, and of course he knows. What's he 'un here fur if he don't know?"

"Well, I'll abide."

I was trying to avoid the issue when a rap came at the door and in walked a man of about 35. He was a fair looking man and lived about ten miles away. Bailey came in just then, and was called out doors by the new arrival for a consultation lasting about ten minutes. Then the mother was called out, and upon her return she took Betty into another room. Then the men came in, and pretty soon Bailey, his wife and myself had the kitchen, while Betty and the stranger had the parlor.

"He's a widower from the next cove," explained Mrs. Bailey. "Wants to be hitched agin. Wants our Bet. What d'ye think, stranger?"

"That would settle the fussing."

"Deed it would. It's got so pap and me can't stand it. His name is Bill Stovin and he's worth a heap. What d'ye think, stranger?"

"I like the idea. If Betty marries one of the young men some one will get shot. Better give 'em both the slip."

"That's it! Too much fussing. We can't stand it no mo'."

Next morning at breakfast the mother inquired of Betty, as she poured the coffee:

"Will ye abide or not? The stranger knows what Bill was yere fur?"

"Reckon it's too late," was the blushing reply.

"How?"

"I've abided to Bill."

"Is the day sot?"

"Yes."

"Thank the Lord! The fussing is all over! Jist what the stranger was going to say. He knows. He wouldn't be way down yere if he didn't. Pap, you ax an extra blessin' this meal, and stranger, don't fear that bacon. It's some of my own cure."—M. Quad in Detroit Free Press.

The New Explosive.

The discovery, by a Pittsburg chemist, of a new powder which is more powerful for small arms than any previously in use, is an interesting indication of what the United States can do when its attention is turned to providing the materials of war. With fast dynamite cruisers, dynamite cannon a possibility, for cast steel heavy artillery, and a new powder for small arms among our late warlike products, it will be seen that we are prepared, if it comes to the test, to repeat the achievements of the days when our monitors and Parrott and Rodman guns reduced the Old World navies to the condition of old junk. According to the statements given the explosive power of the new powder is somewhat less than that of dynamite, and probably considerably below the later inventions known in Europe. But the claim of superior safety and its adaptability to firearms, with the possibility of making a cannon in which it can be used, will, if substantiated by experience, make it far more efficient in war than the old explosives. Give Pittsburg a little time and she will make it appear the part of wisdom for the Old World to leave us alone.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Cause and Effect.

Buffon, the great naturalist, one day entertained a company of distinguished savants to dinner. At its conclusion they all went out into the garden. It was a very hot summer's day. In the center of the grounds there stood on a pedestal a large glass globe, which one of the guests happened to touch with his hand, when he found, to his astonishment, that it was warmer on the shady side than on the side turned toward the sun. He communicated this discovery to the other guests, who at once proceeded to verify the statement. What could be the cause?

An animated discussion ensued, in the course of which every imaginable law of physics was made to account for the strange paradox. At length our scientists agreed that it must be so, owing to the laws of reflection, repulsion or exhalation, etc. The host was, however, not quite convinced, and, calling the gardener, he said to him: "Pray, tell us why the globe is warmer on the shady side than on the side turned to the sun?"

The man replied: "Because just now I turned it round for fear of its cracking with the great heat."—Gazette Anecdotique.

What Weakens the Eyes.

There is a popular error that the man who reads a great deal is first to require the services of a specialist in treatment of the eye. Such is not the case. I have found that the greatest sufferers with eye troubles are those who are compelled to use that valuable member in an unnatural position. For example, take the dentist. In examining a patient's teeth he cannot look straight ahead, but does the most of his work under a great strain, with the head in an unnatural position and the eyes twisted so greatly that there is a constant strain upon them. In reading we are taught that when the eye aches it is time to stop. That the dentist cannot do. Some of them are very delicate on this point, but it is a fact that luring my practice I have treated more dentists than members of any other single profession.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Pretty Fashion.

The latest wrinkle among the young newly engaged ladies and their friends (and a very sensible wrinkle it is, too) is a bit of china presented with the note of congratulation. One of our city's daughters has, in this way, made a fine beginning in the bric-a-brac line, and already has a complete dozen of after dinner coffees, and a number of very beautiful plates, as well as other pieces. Time was when every one sent a girl friend a basket of flowers or a box of bonbons. Now, the money formerly spent in those beautiful but perishable things is put in a dainty cup or bonbon dish, and the idea is very graceful and pretty and within the means of any one.—The Capital.

Smallpox.

"I am willing to risk my reputation as a public man," wrote Edward Hine to The Liverpool Mercury, "if the worst case of smallpox cannot be cured in three days by the use of cream of tartar. One ounce of cream of tartar dissolved in a pint of water, drank at intervals, when cold, is a certain, never failing remedy. It has cured thousands, never leaves a mark, never causes blindness, and avoids tedious lingering."

WHAT ON EARTH

Is the reason people will not, can not, or do not see any difference in cheap nostrums put up by Cheap John houses or irresponsible parties at enormous profits, rather than take a medicine of world wide reputation and one that is giving universal satisfaction at equal price? No medicine in the world is giving such unparalleled satisfaction for purifying the blood as BEGGS' BLOOD PURIFIER & BLOOD MAKER, and every bottle that does not do its work will cost you nothing.

J. J. Orr, Druggist.

Used one bottle of Mother's Friend before my first confinement. It is a wonderful remedy. Looked and felt so well afterwards friends remarked it. Would not be without Mother's Friend for any consideration.

LONG LIFE.

There is nothing in the world more generally desired than long life, yet the majority of people put off caring for their health—not because they are really careless, but because we live our lives at such a pace we have not time to give the subject sufficient thought until we recive a reminder in the shape of a severe illness.

Then, too, we are constantly bewildered by the various schools of medicine, and the physicians who represent them, and often blunder in our choice of a doctor.

If people only knew that the very best health-keeper, life-preserver, and disease-preventer that has yet been discovered, is simered down into a concentrated and very palatable form in the shape of New Style Pleasant Taste Vinegar Bitters, they would not hesitate a moment to try it.

But they do not know. How can they know, when so many not only worthless, but positively injurious drugs are constantly flooding the market under various names and guises, that the New Style Vinegar Bitters is as bad as any of them.

They do not know, of course, unless they have courage to try the New Style. It straightens out a tangled-up system in a very short while, and those who buy it once buy it always.

Why dont you try it, reader? It is sent out by a responsible house, and is exactly as represented. It costs but one dollar for a very large bottle. Try it at once and you will never be so glad of anything in your life. Your druggists may not have it, but he will order it for you. Be sure it says New Style Pleasant Taste on carton and bottle before you take it. Try it, and you will feel happier than if you had found a gold mine—of health.

MICHIGAN WHEAT DAMAGED.

Monthly Crop Report for February from 817 Correspondents.

LANSING, Mich., Feb. 13.—The monthly crop report for February, issued Tuesday, is compiled from the reports of 817 correspondents. Two hundred and forty-three in the southern four tiers, fifty-four in the central, and twenty in the northern counties report injury to wheat during January, but no estimate is made of the per cent. of damage. The ground was practically bare of snow up to Jan. 20, with an average depth of 2 3-10 inches in the southern and about 7 6-10 inches in the northern on Feb. 1. There were but two severe changes of temperature during January, the mercury dropping 15 degrees on the 10th and 28 degrees between the 16th and 19th. The condition of horses and sheep is 97, cattle 95 and swine 98 per cent. Four hundred and sixty-seven thousand five hundred and seven bushels of wheat were reported marketed in January, and 10,970,606 bushels for the period of six months previous, or about 47 per cent. of the 1888 crop, and the amount estimated in farmers hands for sale is 4,960,805 bushels.

THE PALMER MINES OF MICHIGAN.

Gen. Russell A. Alger Will Pay $800,000 for Them.

DETROIT, Mich., Feb. 13.—The Palmer mines, located five miles south of Negaunee, will shortly pass into the hands of Gen. Russell A. Alger. His estimate of their value, $800,000, has been accepted and the contract for the delivery of the property upon the payment of the agreed amount signed. The property comprises a tract of land a mile and a half wide east to west and two miles in length and contains 1,240 acres. There are two mines now open on the property. Both have a daily output of about 300 tons and the addition of but little machinery would more than double the output. The product of the mines last year was 60,000 tons and may be made 200,000 tons. The vein runs across the property, and that it does not pinch out on the property is proved by the fact that an opening has been made on the adjoining property east of the same quality of ore.

Michigan Legislature.

LANSING, Mich., Feb. 15.—A bill was introduced in the senate yesterday providing for the winding up of mining and manufacturing corporations whose charters have expired. In the house a bill was introduced prohibiting the sale of beef in any city of 10,000 people when the cattle have not been inspected on the hoof in such city. This is a blow at the Chicago beef industry.

LANSING, Mich., Feb. 14.—Among the bills introduced in the legislature yesterday were the following: Providing a board to examine physicians and license the competent (the board is to be composed of old school Homeopathic and electric physicians); regulating the price of 1,000-mile railway tickets and sleeping and palace car accommodations; providing for a state arbitration board to settle labor troubles; to compel corporations to sell all land in six months which they have held for ten years. A bill imposing a state tax of $1,000 on circuses was killed.

LANSING, Mich., Feb. 15.—A joint resolution was introduced in the legislature yesterday to appoint delegates to the anti-dressed beef convention. A bill was introduced empowering local boards of health to draw on the county for funds to fight epidemics.

LANSING, Mich., Feb. 16.—The senate yesterday passed a bill incorporating the city of Gladstone. Bills were introduced: Prohibiting Sunday theatricals or base ball games and fixing the rate of telegraph service at 1 cent per word. The house wrangled all day over a resolution fixing $5 per day and 10 cents per mile as the pay and mileage of the committees appointed to visit the state institutions. A concurrent resolution was finally adopted to refer the matter to a joint committee.

LANSING, Mich., Feb. 18.—A bill was introduced in the house Saturday fixing $4 per day as the compensation, with 10 cents a mile for mileage, of legislative committeemen who go to visit state institutions. Another bill proposes to reduce railway passenger fares to 2 cents per mile, unless their gross earnings are less than $1,000 per mile, when they may charge 3 cents. In the senate bills were introduced appropriating $250,000 to build an asylum for the criminal insane, and to prohibit the payment of political assessments.

The Territorial Bill.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 16.—The house Friday passed the resolution instructing the house conferees on the territorial bill, which was left in an unfinished stage at Thursday's session, and the bill was again sent to conference. The resolution instructs the conferees to exclude New Mexico from the bill, so amend the bill as to provide for the admission of south Dakota under the Sioux Falls constitution by proclamation of the president without a new vote being taken on the question of division, and to provide for the admission of north Dakota, Montana, and Washington by proclamation. The instructing clause was agreed to by a vote of—yeas, 149; nays, 101.

O'Brien Must Stay in Jail.

DUBLIN, Feb. 16.—The judges before whom Mr. William O'Brien's appeal from the sentence of imprisonment which he is at present serving, was argued Saturday, declined to allow the appeal.

Two Girls Burned to Death.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Feb. 16.—The Saunders house at Pike, Wyoming county, was burned at 1 o'clock Friday morning. Two hired girls were burned to death.

WEST FRANKLIN FARMERS' CLUB.

Mr. John F. Smiths' house was filled to overflowing Friday evening, Feb. 8th. After Sec. pro tem Willis Smith, read the minutes of the last meeting, the following very interesting program was rendered:

Music—Frank Grey and Nellie Smith.
Recitation—Blanch Crittenden.
Chip Basket—Nellie Smith.
Dialogue—"Only a Working Girl," which showed that some of the noblest and most talented persons are those who labor.
Dec.—Clyde Smith.
Music—Mr. Grey and Nellie Smith.
Dec.—Clifford D. Crittenden.
Music—Mr. Grey.

After recess the questions which had been written by the ladies, were answered by the gentlemen as follows:

Mr. O. Alexander—"Is it right for a husband to control the sale of butter and eggs?"

Mr. W. Allen—"Ought a man to know how to do housework?"

Mr. Briggs—"What shall be done to keep more of our boys on the farm?"

Mr. M. Whelan—"Why are ladies called their husband's better-ha.f?"

Mr. W. Crittenden—"Shall we do away with our Farmers' Club and join the Grange?"

Mr. A. Whelan—"Should our farm houses be made as attractive as our means will allow?"

Mr. T. M. Camburn—"Would it be wise for mother's to instruct their boys in common house-work?"

C. D. Crittenden—"What is the Township District System, and will it be a benefit?"

C. A. Pawson—"How long should a couple court before they marry?"

Mr. W. Penticost—"Is this Farmers' Club profitable?"

After listening to the report of the committee on program for the next meeting, the club adjourned to meet at the residence of Mr. W. Pentecost, March 8.

Judging from the increasing attendance and interest manifested, our Farmers' Club is a profitable institution, and has come to stay.

A good program has been prepared for next time, and as officers for the ensuing year are to be elected, all are requested to attend.

BUTTER MAKING—PAST AND PRESENT.

One almost loses faith in humanity when he looks back along the path of progress and notes by what slow stages we have advanced, and how tenaciously we hold to old fogy ideas. If there is one operation that has been more simplified by study and investigation than another, it is the art of butter making, though as yet, the percentage of those who practice better methods is relatively small.

As an example of wonderful progress let us take churning. By the old method, so dear to the hearts of our grandmothers, and mothers too for the most part, the cream was churned not only until the butter had "come," but had been gathered into a single ball as well. The compact roll was taken from the churn and placed into the butter bowl, when the good dame began to mangle it by squeezing, pounding, and spanking it in a most vigorous way; after much, but by no means all, of the butter-milk had been ground out, salt was ground in by about the same motions as the butter-milk was taken out, every movement in both cases injuring the quality of the product. With our present knowledge we keep asking ourselves, as we reflect on the subject, why did our grandmothers stop churning when the butter had "come" and before it was "gathered," and remove all the butter-milk by washing the pellets with clear water in the modern method? Our grandmothers granulated their butter just as successfully as we do to-day, but instead of stopping at granulation, they kept right on pounding it with the churn-dash until it became a single mass. The useless labor expended in the past on the one item of squeezing out the butter-milk in working butter is equal, I really believe, to all that required to build every railroad in America.

While we are astounded at the lack of thought of past generations, in regard to removing butter milk from the butter, we are forced to confess, equally, great stupidity at the present day in the efforts going on for the improvements of churns. It is said that there is a patent issued at Washington for a new churn every day in the year. The farmer who passes a year without being approached by the agent of the only and most wonderful churn ever made, has reason to congratulate himself. Inventors seem to think that no knowledge of the laws of churning are necessary, in order to bring out a new invention, and that a churn which will grind out the butter in the shortest time will prove the greatest success. Of course every patentee succeeds in producing the best churn. If you doubt this, read over his testimonials, some of them given by your neighbors, if not by your very self.

After looking over the subject, I am convinced that any churn that has inside fixtures of any kind, whatever, is to be avoided, and that the common box, barrel or rectangular, all of which are very simple are the best for practical use. Avoid all churns that bring the butter in two minutes (which can only be done with small quantites of cream in a large churn) and all devices for blowing air into the cream or pumping noxious gases out of it. Stick to the old barrel, box or rectangular and tell the peripatetic patent-right-churn-man that life is too short to grant him a hearing. Remember that it requires about so much agitation to produce butter from milk and that this agitation had better be distributed through half or three-quarters of an hour than concentrated in a few minutes.

The use of a good thermometer is a great improvement over the method of former days. The most expert butter makers are occasionally mistaken in determining the proper temperature for churning. Do not consider your finger as good an indicator of temperature as the mercurial column.

I have touched on two or three dairy points which stand out prominently and are worthy of thoughtful attention, I believe. To grasp the many points of modern dairying does not require a profound mind, but a discriminating one. There is a sweet reasonableness running through the whole system that appeals at once to the judgment of intelligent people. The farmer who puts himself into the current of dairy thought will be carried along unconciously towards better products and more prosperous days.

As an invigorator and tonic, Laxador, the golden household remedy is nonpareil. It promptly relieves and cures costiveness or constipation or any other bilious affection. Price only 25 cents.

Another investigation has proven beyond doubt that Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup is the best medicine for teething children. Price 25 cents a bottle.

CAMBRIDGE BIRTH-DAY PARTY.

On Monday, February 25th, at the pleasant home of Francis A. Dewey. There was a company of relatives numbering 35—it being the 78th year. The Senior one of this company was a native of Hanover, N. H. in the year 1811; a student at Buffalo Military Academy 1828; was introduced to the wild woods of Tecumseh 1829 There learned to chop and plow; enlisted in the army 1832; was drum major of the 8th regiment in the beautiful forest campaign of over 300 miles in the vast Indian territory. We are pleased to note 1889 at the farm home there floated to the winter breeze from five columns of the piaza the standard flag, the stars and stripes; the parlors were cheerfully furnished; the dining room was tastefully decorated; tables spread with luxurious growth of the fertile soil, not omitting choice plants, beautiful flowers and fruits from orange groves of the South, together with unexcelled plates of chicken pie and oysters. We record thirty children and grand children; all of whom have learned to speak the truth; two of them graduates of college and university; ten of them promoted and successful school teachers for a number of years in different parts of the State. Six are married. With cheerfulness we note they have not learned the use or benefits of tobacco, whiskey or profane language and all are residents of Michigan. With cherished good will each one is ready to assist their aged Father and Mother from their admired and bountiful plantations.

TECUMSEH, THURSDAY, FEB. 14.

THE NATIONAL LEGISLATURE.

Proceedings in the Senate and House of Representatives.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 21.—Senator Stanford presented in the senate yesterday resolutions of the California legislature recommending treaty arrangements with Mexico and England that will prevent the passage of Chinese through Mexico and Canada to the United States. The sundry civil bill was resumed and several amendments agreed to, a long debate ensuing on one allowing a royalty of 50 cents per 1,000 impressions to the inventor of the steam plate-printing presses in the engraving and printing bureau. The house made the royalty 1 cent per 1,000. The amendment was pending at adjournment. The conference report on the territorial admission bill was agreed to, the correspondence in the Sackville case received from the president and referred to the foreign affairs committee and the senate at 6.30 p. m. adjourned.

The house voted to consider the direct tax bill conference report, and adopted the same—yeas, 168; nays, 88. Then the conference report on the territory admission bill was agreed to amid applause. In committee of the whole the postoffice appropriation was resumed, but little progress made, and at 5 p. m. a recess was taken to 7:30. At the evening session a large number of bills were passed, principally authorizing bridges across rivers, and for light-houses, etc. One of the latter was for a light-house and fog signal on the outer breakwater at Chicago, and another for a steam tender for the great lakes. The house adjourned at 10 p. m.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 22.—Spooner, from the public buildings committee, introduced a resolution in the senate yesterday for the arrest of T. D. Fister of the supervising architect's office, who refuses to answer questions regarding his connection with the collection of money for campaign purposes. Morgan objected and the matter went over. The conference report on the executive bill was agreed to. The resolution for an inquiry into the conduct of the last presidential and other elections was taken up and amended to include military and other unlawful use of money. The sundry civil bill was then resumed and the amendment relating to steam plate-printing presses was agreed to. Several other amendments were agreed to, and a vote on one appropriating $[illegible] for the expenses of celebrating the centennial showed no quorum voting, upon which the senate adjourned.

In the house Randall offered a resolution for a joint committee of the two houses to inquire into the expediency of the repeal of the internal revenue tax, and after a long debate it was referred to the committee. [illegible] yesterday concurred in the [illegible] to the bill authorizing a bridge across the Mississippi at Alma, Wis. The [illegible] bill was proceeded with and [illegible] was agreed to declaring April [illegible] next the centennial of Washington [illegible] a national holiday, and providing for a proper celebration of the first meeting of congress after Washington's inauguration by the assembly of the Fifty-first congress on the second Wednesday in December next, with appropriate ceremonies. The amount appropriated is $[illegible]. An amendment appropriating $40,000 for a statue to Gen. Hancock was also agreed to. The agricultural appropriation next came up, and an attempt to take the distribution of seeds from the members of congress and give it to the state experimental stations was defeated. The bill was then passed, and the house amendment to the Mrs. Sheridan pension bill non-concurred in. Reagan addressed the senate in opposition to the resolution for a revision of the election laws as to members of congress. Hoar then attempted to get up the election outrages resolution, but the Democrats resorted to filibustering, and the senate adjourned.

The house signalized the day by a refusal to take up Mills' resolution declaring the senate substitute tariff bill unconstitutional, the vote being 88 for to 143 against. Randall's resolution for the daily assemblage of the house at 10 o'clock, a. m., giving an hour each day for business by unanimous consent was then adopted. The Mrs. Sheridan pension bill was then taken up and passed with an amendment reducing the amount to $2,500 from $5,500; also making it subject to the pension laws so that in case of Mrs. Sheridan's re-marriage the children will be pensioned. The resolution retiring Gen. Rosecrans was adopted. The deficiency bill was considered for a time without action, and then recess to 7:30 p. m. was taken at which time the house met, passed forty private pension bills and at 10 p. m. adjourned.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in lining membranes of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proven this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. DIXON & SON, 303 West King st., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

The Going and Coming

Last Days of the Present Congress at Hand.

A LOOK AHEAD AT THE PROSPECT.

The Appropriation Bills All Safe, and After That Chaos—No Extra Session of the Next Congress Probable Right Away—Names That Loom Up for the Committee Chairmanships.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 25.—This is the last week of the Fiftieth congress. For a time there was a general belief that there would be an extra session of the Fifty-first congress called by President Harrison in the early part of April, but now it is thought that if there is an extra session it will not be called before October. The appropriation bills are in such position that it will take a very unusual and unexpected complication to prevent the passage of any of them. The bill to admit the territories has become a law, and the only business of vital importance, which the Fiftieth congress leaves unfinished is the revenue business. If the direct tax bill should be signed by the president the necessity for the reduction of the revenue will not be immediate, and it is thought that President Harrison will not think it necessary to call together the Fifty-first congress until October.

The elections resolution will hardly come to a final vote in the senate. The Democrats appear anxious to talk on it at great length, and it is probable they will prevent its adoption, and nothing will be done in the senate except passage of the appropriation bills. By mutual understanding the tariff fight in the house was suspended on last Friday that the decks might be cleared for the final action which will probably commence to-morrow, by which time the appropriation bills will be out of the way, probably.

To-morrow Randall will demand consideration of the resolution which gives the Cowles-Randall revenue bill the right of way. Upon this it is impossible to foresee the action of the house. Mills has not yet decided what course he will pursue. By filibustering tactics he can prevent the resolution being ever considered. If it can be brought to a vote it will pass by 100 majority. Great pressure is being brought to bear on Mills by his friends not to interpose obstructive tactics. It is claimed, especially by the southern members, that it is bad policy to place the democratic party in that position in the face of the almost universal demand for the repeal of the tobacco tax. This pressure may, though, overcome Mills' determination to insist at all hazards the passage of the bill. With this resolution out of the way Crisp will call up the California election case, Dunn the Alaska bill, Ford his immigration bill, Oates his naturalization bill, McCreary his Indians, Panama resolution. Special Mills keep to his proposition to use an parliamentary means to defeat the Cowles-Randall bill, will do with the congress.

The Fiftieth congress prepares to track of the members who will return to the next congress, by assigning the possession of the stationery and other furniture. [illegible] The congressmen of the incoming congress will find a great deal of the furniture [illegible] in the capitol, and the [illegible] will be used in the new house. The [illegible] will be used in the senate chamber. The [illegible] will be used in the house. The [illegible] will be used in the senate. The [illegible] will be used in the house. The [illegible] will be used in the senate. The [illegible] will be used in the house. The [illegible] will be used in the senate

This picture shows two laundresses, one at work the other not able to, because her hands are cracked and sore—she has been using soap containing too much alkali. Read Prof. Leeds's report.

Gentlemen:—The sample of "IVORY" Soap which you sent to me for analysis has been received, and you will find analysis herewith. As a result, the "IVORY" Soap while strongly cleansing, leaves the skin soft and pleasant to the touch instead of harsh, uncomfortable, and liable to chap, as results from the use of many common laundry soaps, in which the ratio of uncombined to combined alkali is large. The percentage of uncombined fat in the "IVORY" is very small, hence the lather is clean, white and abundant, with entire absence of oil or grease. There are no injurious substances.

The above considerations show the "IVORY" to be a pure soap and excellent for laundry use.

Very Respectfully Yours,

LABORATORY OF CHEMISTRY, STEVENS INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY, HOBOKEN, N. J. — ALBERT R. LEEDS, PH.D. PROFESSOR OF CHEMISTRY.

A WORD OF WARNING.

There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

MAN AND HIS SHOES.

How much a man is like his shoes!
For instance, both a sole may lose;
Both have been tanned; both are made tight
By co'blers; both get left and right;
Both need a mate to be complete,
And both are made to go on feet.
They both need heeling, oft are sold,
And both in time will turn to mold.
With shoes the last is first; with men
The first shall be the last, and when
The shoes wear out they're mended new.
When men wear out they're men dead, too!
They both are tread upon, and both
Will tread on others, nothing loath;
Both have their ties, and both incline,
When polished, in the world to shine;
And both peg out. Now would you choose
To be a man or be his shoes?

ANOTHER CASHIER GONE.

"Where's the cashier?" asked Mr. Armstock, a director of the Second Bullion bank in Chicago, as he noticed that that useful officer was missing.

"I believe, sir," replied the clerk addressed, "that he left last night on a little vacation."

"Midwinter is rather a curious time to take a vacation in," growled old Armstock. "Where has he gone to?"

"I don't know, sir. I think he went to Milwaukee. His folks live there.

The director said no more. He and the cashier had never been the best of friends, and it was rumored that on a certain occasion when Armstock was a trifle short the cashier had refused to accommodate him temporarily unless sufficient collateral were put up or orders brought to him from the president. Armstock thought it rather hard to be refused by one of his own understrappers in his own bank, or at least in a bank that was partly his, and he claimed that a cashier that was so obtrusively honest was sure to come to a bad end. So when Mr. Armstock found that the cashier had taken a vacation at such an untimely season he made a little investigation on his own account and the next day sought an interview with Mr. Vindex, the bank president.

"Mr. Brown has taken a few days off, I understand?"

"Yes. He was somewhat run down and he asked for a couple of weeks and got it. Business is very slack just now, Mr. Armstock."

"It didn't strike you as a little unusual that he should ask for leave of absence in the depth of winter, did it?"

"I can't say that it did."

"Do you know where he has gone?"

"I did not ask him where he was going. I believe he went to Milwaukee. Not sure, though. Did you want him?"

"I hope we shall not all want him. Would you be surprised to know that he bought a ticket for Montreal and that he is undoubtedly a member of the great American colony there at this moment."

"Montreal?" exclaimed the president, looking a trifle taken aback, for he had every confidence in Mr. Brown.

"Yes, Montreal. Doesn't the name strike you as a trifle ominous? There are quite a number of financial operators in that city!"

The president sat a few moments in silence. Then he said:

"Did you wish to make any proposition, Mr. Armstock?"

"Yes. I wish to know how the books stand. I think a meeting of the directors should be called at once."

"Very well. Supposing we act on your first proposition. I think you will then find we need not act on the second. I might say that it is advisable not to say a word about this to anybody until we are certain that there is something to say."

"It seems to me that the directors ought to know without delay what has happened."

"Well, what has happened? What have you to lay before them? Young Brown is in Montreal, that's all. I have every confidence in Brown, but still I quite see that perhaps it is better to have a look at the books. But until something more definite is known I must insist that nothing that might jeopardize his reputation be said."

The expert speedily made his report. Everything was straight if they knew where a bundle of government bonds were. This bundle amounted to $260,000.

"Do you know anything of these bonds?" asked Mr. Armstock.

"They are in the cashier's private drawer in the safe," replied the president.

"Have you a key?"

"No, I have not."

"Then I propose that the drawer be burst open. If the bonds are there I will pay for setting the drawer right again."

The drawer was burst open.

It was empty.

There was a rather serious meeting of the directors that afternoon, and it was agreed that if possible all publicity should be avoided and that the president and Mr. Armstock should proceed at once to Montreal and see if it was possible to get back any or all of the bonds.

* * * * * * *

The rotunda of the Windsor hotel in Montreal presented a strange sight to the two gentlemen from Chicago on the night of their arrival there. Such a sight could probably be seen in no other place in the world. Everybody seemed to be in snow shoe costume, and some even had on their broad snow shoes and went clamping awkwardly over the tiled pavement in this foot gear, which, however useful on the snow fields, seemed somewhat uncouth in a big hotel. A dozen clubs were represented with a dozen different costumes, some like the rainbow in color, others almost pure white with a dash of red in the stockings and a touch of blue in the toque.

"Is there a Mr. Brown stopping here?" asked Armstock of the busy clerk.

"There are seventeen Mr. Browns here."

"From the United States."

"Eight are from the United States."

"This is Mr. Brown, of Chicago."

"There are five Browns of Chicago."

"It is Mr. James Brown we want to see."

"There are two James Browns from Chicago."

It seems useless to try to see any particular man in this hurrying crowd. So the two men thought they would wait until the different clubs had started out on their tramps. This hotel is the headquarters of most of the snowshoe clubs and the tramps usually begin and often end there. As the two men watched the stirring scene they were suddenly accosted by a man in snowshoe uniform.

"Well, I declare! When did you get in? Why didn't you let me know you were coming? But now that I recollect you did not know that I was here. I'm mighty glad to see you. This is the spot where life is worth living."

"Mr. Brown," said Vindex solemnly, "I never expected this of you."

"Why not? They all do it."

"I regret to say that very many of them do, but I thought better of you."

"I don't see why I shouldn't have a good time as well as anybody else. Seems to me I have worked hard enough in Chicago for the last five years to have earned it.

"Oh, that is the way you look upon it, is it?" broke in Mr. Armstock.

"There is little use of talking to you, I can see that. Now, of course, you cannot bring back to Chicago all the money you took with you?"

"Of course, I can't. You don't think I can live here for nothing, do you?"

"Haven't you any sense of shame at all, Mr. Brown?"

"Shame?" said Brown, looking down at his blanket. "Look here, I have every respect for the opinion of you two estimable gentlemen, but don't you think you are a little ridiculous? Not to put too fine a point on it, might I ask what business it is of yours, anyhow? A person would not appear in a Chicago hotel in this costume, but here it is a different matter. It is the custom of the town."

"We are here to know," said Armstock, "what terms we can make with you. How many of the bonds will you give us back if nothing more is said of the matter?"

"Bonds? What bonds?"

"Bonds to the amount of $260,000 that were in your private drawer."

Mr. Brown gave a long whistle.

"Oh, ho!" he said. "I see how it is. I am a defaulter, am I? Say, Armstock, has anything of this got into the papers?"

"No, luckily for you, it has not."

"Luckily for you, rather. You did not suppose that I would leave bonds to that amount in a drawer in a safe that would be open every day while I was away. Any person of a prying turn of mind and a chisel could break into that drawer. The bonds are in the vaults of the Safe Deposit company of Chicago. I'm here merely to enjoy the carnival, and not to join the American colony of defaulters."

Mr. Brown is now back at his place in the Second Bullion bank of Chicago, and speaks in glowing terms of the good time he had in Montreal.—Luke Sharp in Detroit Free Press.

A Heavy Expense.

One of the items of expense of running a hotel, from which there is no direct return, but which is as much of a necessity as the maintenance of furniture itself, is that of paper, envelopes, pens and ink used by guests. This amounts to not less than $1,500 per annum in the Laclede hotel. Another item is that of soap and toilet paper, which would foot up to $500. A very inconsiderable portion of the paper used in the writing room falls into the hands of loungers and dead beats. Their only chance is to grab the odd sheets of stationery left by guests on the table, who have secured what they asked for at the desk. As to the frequent complaint made by hotel men of the expense of maintaining the public toilet room, that is offset by the receipts from the boot blacking privilege. —St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Cold Cut.

When the Blaines were living at Washington, some lady heard that their cook was an unusually good one. The lady had an ambition to possess one herself that she might give good dinners, and she promptly went round, rang the bell at the front door, and asked to see Mrs. Blaine's cook, and offered her higher wages than she was then receiving. Afterward this lady and Mrs. Blaine met at dinner. The lady was introduced, was sugary in her manner, mentioned her own name to make sure Mrs. Blaine should remember it, and was making pleasant speeches of all sorts, when Mrs. Blaine looked at her and said: "Oh, yes, I remember you—you called on my cook," and refrained from adding any word of explanation. It was rather embarrassing for the other lady.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Water Cures.

How water is the best thing that can be used to heal a sprain or bruise. The wounded part should be placed in water as hot as can be borne for fifteen or twenty minutes, and in all ordinary cases the pain will gradually disappear. Hot water applied by means of cloths is a sovereign remedy for neuralgia and pleurisy pains. For burns or scalds apply cloths well saturated with cool alum water, keeping the injured parts covered from the air.—Good Housekeeping.

The Other One.

THE SILVERS TRAGEDY.

the Affair is Viewed by Outside and Disinterested Parties.

Neither in this nor any other country does the history of crime furnish any parallel for the terrible tragedy at Tecumseh whereby an entire family was wiped out. The imagination recoils from the task of guessing what motive could have actuated the husband and father in his awful deed. The recourse to insanity, which solves so many otherwise mysterious cases, seems impossible here. There is not the slightest evidence of mental alienation on the part of the homicide. The surroundings of the case show him indeed to have been singularly clear-headed. The murder itself testifies to the same effect. It is hardly conceivable that a man with his mind at all unbalanced could have carried out his deadly programme with such fatal accuracy and precision. There would have been some break in the sequence. The wife or one of the children would have been aroused before the deed was completed.

Yet there is no explanation but insanity which seems broad enough to cover the case. Even if the murderer were in dread of exposure and of disgrace before his family his method of preventing exposure and disgrace was essentially an insane one.

The ordinary incentive to an exhaustive investigation—the conviction and punishment of the murderer—is wanting. It is to be hoped, however, that even without this incentive the investigation will be made. If there are causes and motives hitherto unknown and unsuspected, which prompt men to the commission of such deeds, it is of the highest importance that society be made acquainted with them.—Detroit Free Press.

Now here is the case: A man who appears to have been a model citizen in all the relations of life, deliberately plots the destruction of his family, and the killing of himself, and successfully carries out entire the fatal programme. What theory of the crimes can be advanced? All are the merest conjecture.

He was acquring property and apparently succeeded in life. There seems to be nothing in the rumor of any serious misunderstanding between himself and wife, as to where they should reside. She, for the sake of the children's education, preferred to live in Tecumseh, he, for economical reasons preferred to remove to his farm.

But that is not enough reason why he should plan and execute the destruction of his family and himself.

But, had the wife developed symptoms of dementia? Her mother died in a lunatic asylum. She was at the age when such symptoms are apt to develop, if ever. Was this the sorrow that brooded on the mind of the husband and father? Was this the reason for his frequent attacks of moodiness? He was a reticent man, not likely to ask his friends to lighten his burden of troubles by listening to their recital. Did he brood on this domestic difficulty until his mind, too, became unbalanced? Did he foresee similar trouble with his two loved daughters, and decide to make any such sorrow for them impossible? If so, the community can have nothing but sincere pity for the stricken man, whose mental balance was slowly but surely overcome. What terrible thoughts must have seared his brain as gradually he approached that often imaginary line between sanity and its opposite, but across which, for him, appeared nothing but the bloody spectres of murder and suicide.—Adrian Times.

WASHINGTON CITY, Feb. 23.—After the routine business of the morning hour had been disposed of in the senate Saturday Hoar's election outrages resolution was taken up, and Daniels addressed the senate in opposition thereto. He spoke five hours with a short interruption by Hoar, and had not concluded when at 5:50 p. m. the senate adjourned.

The house wasted an hour in filibustering and then passed the senate bill to ratify the agreement with the Creek Indians for the opening of certain lands to settlement in Indian territory, and concurred in the senate amendments to the census bill. In committee of the whole the deficiency bill came up and an amendment offered to provide an appropriation to reimburse Mrs. Gen. Hancock for money expended by Gen. Hancock in entertaining visitors to the Yorktown celebration. Cheadle moved to amend by providing that none of the money appropriated be used to reimburse Mrs. Hancock for money expended for wines and liquors. This was rejected and the original amendment agreed to. An extra month's pay was voted to house and senate employes, and then the bill was laid aside and eulogies were pronounced upon the late James N. Burnes, of Missouri. Appropriate resolutions were then adopted and the house adjourned.

The President's Agreement "Goes."

CHICAGO, Feb. 22.—The railway presidents met yesterday and contrary to expectations concluded to organize the Inter State Railway association with those railways which would go in. The Wisconsin Central determined to sign and this left only four roads out of the twenty-two which were thought necessary. The agreement was formally adopted by the other eighteen roads.

Monumental Liar

Seems To Be the Correct Name for Pigott.

AN INFORMER FOR REVENUE ONLY.

Not in the Least Fastidious as to the Who Provided the Cash So Long as He Got It—Strong Presumptive Evidence That He Is Also a Forger—Germany Orders Iron clads to Samoa—Latest Report About Stanley—Foreign Miscellany.

LONDON, Feb. 23.—In the Parnell commission yesterday the cross-examination of Pigott was continued. Pigott admitted having written to Archbishop Walsh that the evidence which would be produced before the commission could be rendered harmless by the exposure of the means by which it had been obtained. Witness admitted receiving the letter from Archbishop Walsh, mentioned Thursday. He was very much distressed for money when he wrote to the archbishop.

Sir Charles Russell so closely questioned Pigott at this point that he voluntarily exclaimed: "I may as well say at once that my statements to Archbishop Walsh were unfounded. [Sensation.] They were exaggerations with a very little truth. My statement to the archbishop that I could nullify the evidence by exposing the discreditable means by which it was sought to institute proceedings was also unfounded."

His opinion being asked co[illegible] the genuineness of the "Parnell l[illegible] said he had stated that th[illegible] doubtful. Pigott would not [illegible] had not told Archbishop Wals[illegible] ters were forgeries. [Sensation.] [illegible] ed the genuineness of the lette[illegible] he was unable to identify the ha[illegible]ng in any of them. He believed that the Egan letters were genuine, but he would not swear that they were. He admitted having asked Archbishop Walsh not to believe that he [witness] was the fabricator of the letters.

Sir Charles Russell asked witness if he knew who did fabricate the letters. Witness said he did not, nor did he believe that they were fabricated.

Russell produced letters showing that Pigott had literally hawked his information around. He had written letters to Egan similar to those to Archbishop Walsh, and when the phrasing of Egan's replies was compared with the same in the alleged Egan letters given to The Times they were very similar, indicating forgery. This, however, Pigott denied, and had the cheek to say that he did not know but what the letters Russell produced were forgeries.

Thursday just before Pigott's examination closed for the day Russell asked him to write the word "hesitancy" on a piece of paper. In one of the alleged Parnell letters this word is spelled "hesitency," and the object, of course, was to see if Pigott would spell it the same way, in order to create a strong presumption of forgery. He did spell it with the "e" instead of "a," and it was also shown that he had frequently spelled it that way in other letters he had written. Yesterday he admitted that he misspelled the word "hesitancy" in the witness box Thursday. He believed that the knowledge that the letter of Jan. 9, 1882, similarly misspelled the word had influenced his mind. This letter did not come into his possession until the summer of 1886, so he could not account for the misspelling of "hesitancy" in his own letter prior to that.

Sir Charles Russell produced the witness' letters to Meagher and pointed out further resemblances to The Times letters. He then asked the witness if he was not ashamed of himself.

Pigott replied hotly: "Under the circumstances, no; it is scandalous that I should be thus questioned. I did not forge the letters. If I did, I should not be here."

Mr. Reid produced letters written by Pigott to Forster, in which Pigott asked a loan. After much writing, in which Pigott pleaded poverty, Forster sent him £100 as a private loan. Some time later, as a matter of personal sympathy, Forster loaned Pigott £50 to enable him to go to America.

The effect of Pigott's evidence has had a startling effect upon public opinion, and the matter is almost the sole topic of conversation in all circles in and out of the lobbies of the house of commons. The conviction is rapidly becoming general that Pigott himself is the forger of the so-called Parnell letters, and Tories vie with Parnellites in the depth of their condemnation of the wretch who is convicted out of his own mouth of acts scarcely less heinous than those of Judas Iscariot.

It is asserted that Mr. Walter, who was mainly responsible for The Times' crusade against Parnell, will personally bear all of the expenses and costs incurred by the paper in conducting the case before the commission, even if he has to sell his estates to raise the money. This resolve is believed to be the result of a stormy interview between Mr. Walter and his copartners in the proprietorship of The Times, in which the matter of the paper's inability to pay its usual dividend was the foremost topic of discussion and Mr. Walter's sudden announcement of his intention to go to Nice to recuperate is undoubtedly another result of that heated meeting.

LONDON, Feb. 23.—At a secret meeting of the municipal council of Munich, just held, the clericals, who constitute a majority of the council, declined to support a resolution to congratulate Dr. Dollinger, the leader of the "Old Catholics," upon the occurrence of his 90th birthday. The result of the meeting becoming known, a large meeting of citizens was held at which it was decided to resent the action of the council by appointing a deputation to offer congratulations to the distinguished divine.

TEN NIGHTS IN A BAR ROOM.

The Tecumseh Juvenile Dramatic society, under the management of Theodore P. Wood, formerly of the Toledo Dramatic Society, will present to the citizens of Tecumseh the beautiful and thrilling temperance drama, "Ten Nights in a Bar Room," in five acts, with a full cast of characters (16 persons in all) on Tuesday evening, March 5, 1889, at Sutton's Opera House.

This magnificent play will be produced as originally written and no pains will be spared to make the entertainment a rich treat to all who may favor us with their patronage. The usual tiresome delays so peculiar to amateur entertainments will be entirely dispensed with, as the "Aurora Quartette" has been engaged for the evening and will give a full Vocal and Instrumental Concert, lasting for full a half hour, beginning at precisely 7:30 o'clock and closing at 8 sharp—the time for the first curtain in Ten Nights in a Bar Room. The Quartette will fill the interval between acts with some of their choicest selections.

The poceeds of the entertainment will be devoted to the interests of Co. A. Tecumseh Cadets. Turn out and encourage the boys by giving them a crowded house.

Grand Vocal and instrumental Concert by the Aurora Quartette: Chas. Keyser, Soprano; Louis Schneider, Tenor, W. L. Heck, Alto; Theo. P. Wood, Bass.

A bill has been introduced in the legislature making it a misdemeanor to "treat" another to a glass of liquor. If such a law could be enforced it would do more towards restricting drunkenness than all other laws combined. It is the worst of all evils connected with liquor selling.

It is nip and tuck between the postoffice department and the railroad company. When the distance from the depot to the postoffice is over one hundred rods, the government carries the mail, less than that distance the railroad company does the work. The building of the new depot makes the distance so near the limit that there is some question as to which carries the mail.—Hudson Post.

THE G. A. R. ENTERTAINMENT.

The drama entitled, "By Force of Impulse" which was given at the Opera House last Tuesday evening under the auspices of Beer's Post, was the best amateur performance that has been put on the boards in this village in many months. We were prepared to witness a good play, creditably rendered, but both the play and its presentation exceeded our anticipations. Many of the parts were performed in a manner worthy of professionals.

Levi B. Thompson represented the staid Puritan in an admirable manner. Will Hayden excelled himself as Reginald and his part was probably the most difficult one in the play. He showed a full appreciation of the character and his acting was full of earnest emotion without being overdrawn. E. J. Hollister, as Lowville was entirely at home. H. L. Sweet acted Murdell to perfection, and we are glad to know that he isn't half as big a scoundrel as he appeared to be on the stage. J. W. Wightman was admirably placed in the character of Dollar clutch. H. W. Stevens acted Col. Morrell as superbly as the original could have done. Moore and Stewart did the dudes as though they had been there before. Jehiel Davidson is always at home in comedy, but he surpassed himself as Wellington. He invariably appeared on the scene exactly in the nick of time and just in the right way. The young ladies personified the characters allotted to them splendidly. Miss Daniels as the heroine of the play, exhibited fine dramatic talents, while Misses Jordan and Wescott in the two minor parts, did equally as well. The entire play was cast with excellent judgment. The dancers all acquitted themselves finely.

The committee of the Post having charge of the affair was: I. D. Shull, J. M. Ingersoll, Alva Spade, H. J. Sweet, Geo. S. VanTyne and Jehiel Davidson and to their careful foresight and attention to details may be attributed the success of the entertainment. The music too was a prominent feature and elicited the warmest praise from the audience, the orchestra consisting of Will and Ina Ingersoll, Mabel Hayden and Emil Ahrens. The Post netted about seventy dollars for the relief fund.

A CORRECTION.

EDITOR OF THE HERALD:—In your report of the Silver's tragedy of the 17th inst. you seem to have left out some important facts.

1st. That after the jury was impanneled, Mr. E. G. Cook was requested to take charge of the affairs, and that he came to me and told me to be ready to attend to the undertaking as soon as the inquest was held, and by his request I was on hand with proper help. As soon as the physicians were through with their post mortem on Mrs. Silvers, the three bodies were taken in charge by us and laid out and properly cared for, for burial. While caring for the last one, Mr. Kyle requested Mr. Tansley to look in Mr. Silvers pocket for a key to the barn, and not finding it, he went down stairs and in his coat pocket found the letter directed to himself, instructing him as regards the safe and letter for Mr. L. P. Tribou. In the mean time we had finished caring for the bodies and came home for rest and supper. When I was called upon by Messrs. Kyle and Tribou and informed that a request in a letter found, was to the effect that Mr. McCowen do the undertaking, asking me to proceed no further. This was done without consulting Mr. Cook or his knowledge until next day, Monday. The letter was not found until about 6 o'clock in the evening.

One or two other reports I wish to correct, that are afloat. One is that myself and Mr. Silvers had a quarrel, and the other is that I refused my hearse for the funeral. To the first I can say that my relations were always friendly with Mr. Silvers. That while in his livery business he drove my hearse, and after he sold his livery and went to his last place of business, I sold him furniture to fit his office. As to the last report there is no truth in it. I was not asked for my hearse and of course could not refuse to let it go, as others have done.

A BED TIME SONG.

Sway to and fro in the twilight gray,
This is the ferry for Shadowtown,
It always sails at the end of the day
Just as the darkness is closing down

Rest, little head, on my shoulder, so;
A sleepy kiss is the only fare;
Drifting away from the world we go,
Baby and I in the rocking chair.

See where the firelogs glow and spark,
Glitter the lights of the Shadow land,
The winter rains on the window, hark!
Are ripples lapping upon its strand!

There, where the mirror is glancing dim,
A lake is shimmering cool and still
Blossoms are waving above its brim,
Those over there on the window sill

Rock slow, more slow in the dusky light,
Silently lower the anchor down,
Dear little passenger, say "Good night,"
We've reached the harbor of Shadowtown.

—Frederick (Md.) News.

THE LOST BRACELET.

"There is a remarkable story connected with that bit of jewelry," said a gentleman recently to an Alta reporter, who was examining with some interest a much worn silver bracelet, on which with difficulty could be traced the letters NOMAH, scratched evidently with a knife. "The bracelet came into my possession, said the gentleman, "in a peculiar manner, and if you don't mind a short story I'll tell you about it."

The reporter, of course, was anxious for the story, and the gentleman, after lighting a cigar, went on with his narrative. "I suppose you know that some time back I was for several years connected with the Columbia river steamboats, and so was often thrown among old time steamboat men, whose pioneer and legendary knowledge was most profound.

"The Columbia river is a magnificent body of water, and I doubt if there is any grander scenery in the world than that along the river from The Dalles to the Pacific ocean. It is at the Cascades, however, that the country is of the wildest description and the mountains are dark with the gloom of dense forests or rugged with tremendous cliffs and frightful precipices. There is a tradition among the few straggling Indians that one now sees along the river, which is to the effect that many, many years ago a great arch of rock spanned the river at the Cascades forming a natural bridge of stupendous size. One day the two great spirits living one on either side of the river got into a desperate quarrel, and in their mighty wrath and fury they tore the bridge asunder, and in its fall it choked with huge blocks of stone the current of the river, thus forming the Cascades, around which Uncle Sam is now building a series of locks at enormous cost. Not only was the bridge destroyed, but from the mountain sides the angry spirits clawed off masses of rock and stone to hurl at each other. Strangely enough, the mountains on each side of the Columbia at the Cascades do look as if they had been savagely dealt with in some Titanic struggle, and it takes but little stretch of the imagination to believe that the tradition is true so far as the natural bridge is concerned.

"But the bracelet," interposed the reporter.

"I am coming to that," continued the gentleman, as he brushed the ashes from his cigar.

"In them mountains around the Cascades there are numberless lakes unsurpassed in beauty, and many of them that to this day no white man has ever seen, so rough and literally wild is the country through which one must travel to reach them. Some of these lakes are many acres in extent, the heavy timber coming right down to the edge of the water. Clearer than the brightest diamond that ever sparkled are the waters of these lakes, and of unfathomable depth. In the hottest days of August the water is almost at the freezing point, and, as you can easily imagine, the trout in the lakes are magnificent fighters, and take a fly with such savage earnestness that it makes your blood bound through your veins with excitement as your reel whirrs to the first mad rush of the sturdy fish. Many an hour I've fished in those lakes with a halfbreed boy to paddle my shallow dugout noiselessly through the water. Curious, ain't it, that those trout will never take a fly unless the wind is blowing down stream, and as for"——

"Haven't heard anything about the bracelet yet," interrupted the reporter.

"That's so. Well, one day the wind was blowing stiff down stream, and as our steamboat was waiting to tow up a barge loading with railroad iron Capt. Kow suggested that we go a fishing to a certain lake some miles back in the woods. We knew that no one had fished there for several years, and that the Indians never went near it, as they said an evil spirit in the shape of a monster man lived in its waters, and though several Indians had in bravado gone to the lake to fish, none of them ever returned. After a hard tramp we reached the lake, and in a few minutes had constructed a rough craft, pushed out to the center of the lake and thrown our flies. I never had such sport in my life. A fly could scarcely touch the water before it was seized by some hungry and keen eyed trout. Finally, tired of the sport, we determined to put back to the shore, and, just for luck, I threw my fly once more. There was a slight tug, but to my annoyance I found the fly was caught in a bit of drift. We paddled up to it, and, reaching over to free the hook, I saw a piece of shining metal on the drift. I hauled in the branch, and there was that bracelet you have been looking at. At first I did not notice the letters scratched on it, but fell to wondering how it got into the lake, for certainly for twenty years past no Indian had been within a mile of the lake.

"Capt. Kow, who was one of the oldest pilots on the river and deeply versed in all of the river lore, took the bit of jewelry in his hand and began a close examination. He was, in the main, one of the coolest men I ever knew and seldom showed the slightest emotion under any circumstances. He had examined the bracelet but a moment or so when I heard him exclaim, in what for him were most unusual tones: 'Here, C. H.' (that's what he always called me), 'look and see if these scratches are not letters.' I looked and made out, as you have, the word NOMAH. 'Yes,' said the captain, that's what I thought. The first part of the name has been effaced by time, but the name in full was Multnomah. When I was a boy I remember she was the most beautiful maiden among the Klickitats—and they were warriors in those days.

"'Why, captain,' said I, 'this is quite a romance; tell me about it.'

"'There isn't much to tell, except that thirty years ago Harry Sprague and myself were just of age, and the Klickitats were a powerful tribe of Indians, and during the salmon season they came in great numbers to the Cascades to fish and gather berries. Harry and I were on the steamboats running to the Cascades, and Multnomah was a beautiful Indian girl. I always thought that she must have been a descendant of some adventurous fur trader, for her features were of Caucasian type, and her complexion was not more dusky than that of a Spanish beauty. Harry fell in love with her and she with him—those things often happened in the early days, you know—and all would have been well but for the Indian war which broke out about that time, and the tribe to which Multnomah belonged left the river to go upon the warpath. A little while before the tribe disappeared Harry had taken one of Multnomah's bracelets and scratched on it with his knife her name. Shortly after this the blockhouse at the cascades was attacked, but the Indians were repulsed, and that night we captured a young Indian boy lurking around the settlements who knew Harry and confided to him that Multnomah wished to meet him the next night at the Lost lake. It must have been very important business that would have induced the Indian girl to visit the dreaded lake; but we feared a plot and tried to dissuade Harry from going. He went, and when he returned, a day later, it was only to die of innumerable arrow wounds.

"'Before he died he told me that he had reached the lake just at dawn. He was at the point of stepping from the underbrush when he caught sight of Multnomah standing on a log projecting over the water. Her long hair fell over her shoulders in disorder and a bright red blanket clung in graceful folds about her slender figure. She was gazing intently on the lake. Harry was just about to speak her name when an arrow whizzed through the air straight to the heart of the dusky maiden. Backward she fell into the lake and sank beneath the surface. At the same time Harry received a mortal wound. He never told us how he got back to the river, and we buried him in the woods he loved so well. The Indians always claimed Multnomah was seized by an evil spirit which lives in the lake in the form of a monster fish and devoured. At any rate her body was never found, but this was her bracelet. Strange that it should have been recovered after so many years.'

"'And that,' said the gentleman, as he reached for a fresh cigar, 'is why I said there was a remarkable story connected with that bit of jewelry.'"—Alta California.

Stable Floors.

In reply to the query, "Of all the different kinds of stable floors, particularly for cattle, which kind do you say is best?" Country Gentleman replies:

You will have to decide partly according to circumstances, between earth floors, or paved with cobble stones, flag stones, cement, durable plank, or plank and iron grating. Earth will answer only where there is perfect natural drainage or careful artificial drainage, with enough litter or bedding at hand to absorb all the liquid manure; otherwise the stable will become muddy. Stones or flagging will answer only where there will always be plenty of straw litter to make the floor soft and warm. Cement has partly the same objection, and is liable, if in horse stables, to be more or less broken up by the sharp horseshoes; but with plenty of litter this objection is obviated. Plank has several advantages; it is less hard and cold than stone and cement; it is easily kept clean; and if well soaked, when made, with crude petroleum, and with a coat of gas tar between the two layers of plank, it will be quite durable. The manure gutter is easily made and managed.

Her Errand Boy.

The story comes from Washington that the other day a gentleman called upon Chief Justice Fuller and was shown into the parlor. Very soon one of his daughters, Pauline by name, a young lady in her early teens, came in to explain that there had been a mistake by the servant. "My papa," said she, "has gone on an errand for me, and I am expecting him back very soon. You might wait for him if you wish." Fancy the chief justice of the United States running errands for a parcel of girls!—Chicago Herald.

Typhoid Statistics.

Professor Ruata, of Perugia, is authority for the statement that there are annually in Italy nearly 300,000 cases of typhoid fever, of which number 27,000 prove fatal. One-third of the persons in Italy who reach the age of 45 have the fever, and in some districts more than 3 per cent of the population die from this one cause.—Science.

The Washington Style.

Nowadays the average Beneficiary is so fond and proud of his wife that he never detracts from the splendors of her appearance by being seen with her in public. As a rule, he goes with another woman for the manifest purpose of giving his wife an advantage.—Washington Critic.

A GREAT MAGAZINE.

The Century for 1889.

THE question has often been asked, "to what does The Century owe its great circulation?" The Christian Union once answered this by the statement that "it has been fairly won, not by advertising schemes, but by the excellence which characterizes it in every department." In their announcements for the coming year the publishers state that it has always been their desire to make The Century the one indispensable periodical of its class, so that whatever other publication might be desirable in the family, The Century could not be neglected by those who wish to keep abreast of the times in all matters pertaining to culture. And the unprecedented circulation of the magazine would seem to be the response of the public to this intention.

With the November number The Century begins its thirty-seventh volume. Two great features of the magazine which are to continue throughout the new volume are already well known to the public, the Lincoln history and the papers on "Siberia and the Exile System." The first of these, written by Messrs. Nicolay and Hay, President Lincoln's private secretaries, contains the inside history of the dark days of the war, as seen from the White House.

THE SIBERIAN PAPERS,

by George Kennan, are attracting the attention of the civilized world. The Chicago Tribune says that "no other magazine articles printed in the English language just now touch upon a subject which so vitally interests all thoughtful people in Europe and America and Asia." As is already known, copies of The Century entering Russia have these articles torn out by the customs officials on the frontier.

DURING 1889

The Century will publish the most important art feature that has yet found place in its pages. It is the result of four years' work of Mr. Timothy Cole, the leading magazine engraver of the world, in the galleries of Europe, engraving from the originals the greatest pictures by the old masters. A series of papers on Ireland, its customs, landscapes, etc., will appear, and there are to be illustrated articles on Bible scenes, treating especially the subjects of the International Sunday-School Lessons. George W. Cable will write "Strange, True Stories of Louisiana." There will be novelettes and short stories by leading writers, occasional articles on war subjects (supplemental to the famous "War Papers" by General Grant and others, which have been appearing in The Century), etc., etc.

The Century costs four dollars a year, and it is published by The Century Co., of New York, who will send a copy of the full prospectus to any one on request.

St. Nicholas for 1889.

PEOPLE who have the idea that St. Nicholas magazine is only for little children should look over the prospectus of that magazine for 1889, and they will discover that it is for children of all ages, "from five to eighty-five," as some one recently said of it. Indeed, while St. Nicholas is designed for girls and boys, it might almost be called a "family magazine," for the grown-up members of a household will find much to interest them in every number.

The editor, Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, calls the next volume an "all-round-the-world year," because it is to contain so many illustrated papers about the world in general—not dry geographical papers, but stories and sketches and tales of travel and adventure by land and sea—and all illustrated by the best artists. The features will include a serial story, "How We Made the Farthest North," by Gen. A. W. Greely, the well-known commander of the Greely Expedition; a serial about Canada, by Mrs. Catherwood, who is writing a serial story for The Century this year; "Indians of the Amazon," by Mrs. Frank R. Stockton. There are many papers about Europe, including a Christmas story of life in Norway, by H. H. Boyesen; articles on Holland and the Dutch, by Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge; "The Queen's Navy," by Lieut. F. Harrison Smith, R. N., with illustrations of many of England's finest war ships; "The Winchester School," illustrated by Joseph Pennell; "English Railway Trains," by Wm. H. Rideing, etc., etc. The French papers include "Ferdinand de Lesseps and his two Ship Canals," and there are several interesting contributions on German, Italian and Russian subjects.

Under "Asia," comes "Boys and Girls in China," by Yan Phou Lee (a recent graduate of Yale); "Home Life in the East," by Mrs Holman Hunt, and a number of papers about Japan. Under "Africa" there is a sketch of Henry M. Stanley, by Noah Brooks, and several stories about Egypt. Australia is not forgotten, nor the islands of the sea, and there are even to be stories of under the sea.

Of course the bulk of the contents will relate to American subjects, as usual. Mrs. Burnett, the author of "Little Lord Fauntleroy," contributes a story of New York called "Little Saint Elizabeth;" there will be papers describing how the government offices are conducted, papers about athletics, amateur photography, etc. The full prospectus will be sent by the publishers, The Century Co., of New York, to any one who wishes to see it.

THE MESSIAHSHIP.

LESSON IX. FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, MARCH 3.

Text of the Lesson, Mark viii. 27-38—Commit Verses 36-38—Golden Text, Mark viii. 34—Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

Between this lesson and the last one we have the record of the death of John the Baptist, the feeding of the multitudes on two different occasions, the walking on the sea, the great faith of the Syrophenician woman and the healing of her daughter, the healing of a deaf and dumb man, and others.

27. "Whom do men say that I am?" He had come into the town of Cæsarea Philippi.

28, 29. "Peter answereth and saith unto Him, Thou art the Christ." After drawing from them the opinions of others, He then pointedly and personally puts the question: "But whom say ye that I am?" Let every teacher learn from Him how to teach, and after awakening the interest of the scholars by drawing from them what they know, fail not to ascertain what they individually believe and what Christ is to them. The full answer of Peter was: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God" (Matt. xxvi, 16); but while we call attention to what is written in the parallel accounts in the other gospels, we believe that each gospel is complete in itself for the object for which it was written, and there is a reason for the omissions and insertions peculiar to each. If we want to know all about His life as the God-man, we read the four gospels side by side; but if we desire to know Him specially as the Son of David or the perfect Servant or the Son of Man or the Son of God, it would be well for the time to confine our attention to the gospel which thus describes Him. Much as we might like to enter here into the precious things of Matt. xvi, 17-19, our limited space forbids it; but we must say a word about the significance of "the Christ." John i, 14; iv, 25, tells us that Christ is the same as Messiah (the former being Greek and the latter Hebrew). John i, 45, tells us that He is the one of whom Moses and the prophets did write. Daniel ix, 24-27, speaks of Him as "the Messiah, the Prince" who shall make an end of the sins of Daniel's people and bring to them everlasting righteousness. Matt. ii, 1-4, makes it plain that the Christ is the King of the Jews; the English word corresponding to Messiah, and Christ is "the Anointed," and in the song of Hannah (I Sam. ii, 10) we see Him as He will be when He comes in power to sit upon the throne of His glory as King of the Jews. You may know Him as Jesus who saves and keeps you, as Lord whom you delight to acknowledge as your possessor and proprietor, but do you know Him as the Christ, the coming King of Israel and of the whole earth?

30. "He charged them that they should tell no man of Him." Matt. xvi, 20, says to tell no man that He was Jesus the Christ. He never forbade them to say that He was Jesus the Saviour, but now that the rulers of the people had fully determined to kill Him (Matt. xii, 14) He forbids them to make Him known as the Christ.

31. "He began to teach them that the Son of Man must suffer." At His first cleansing of the temple He had foretold His death and resurrection (John ii, 19-21), and later, when they asked a sign He spoke of Jonah as a type of his death and resurrection (Matt. xii, 39, 40); but this is his first particular and full announcement of this great event which He again repeats on two other occasions (ix, 31; x, 34).

32. "Peter took Him and began to rebuke Him," saying, "Be it far from thee, Lord; this shall not be unto Thee" (Matt. xvi, 22), or, as in the margin, "Pity thyself, Lord." This was the natural man speaking, and the tendency of the natural man, even in the Christian, is to pity himself and seek his own ease, and against this self indulgence we must as Christians earnestly contend, ever yielding our bodies a living sacrifice.

33. "He rebuked Peter, saying, Get thee behind me, Satan." Peter had just given forth a sweet savour of God in his grand confession of Jesus as the Christ, and now from the same mouth comes the things of men with Satan urging on: "out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing."

34. "Whosoever will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me." It is a most precious truth that the invitation to come is to "Whosoever will" (Acts x, 43; Rom. x, 11, 13; Rev. xxii, 17); and him that cometh shall in no wise be cast out (John vi, 37); but it is also true that no one can truly come, unless they are prepared to deny self and bear the cross after Jesus, and this daily (Luke ix, 23.) Any other aim but the glory of God, any other will but the will of God, either proves that we are not His followers, or if we are, that we are very unlike our Master, and little credit to Him.

35. "For whosoever will save his life shall lose it." That is, whosoever chooses this present life with its joys, in preference to the narrow way of separation from this present evil world unto Christ, shall find in the end that his portion here was his all, and his enjoyment ended when he left this world; while he who chooses Christ and fellowship with Him as his portion here, prepared to renounce with the whole heart, the world, the flesh and the devil, will find that while he may not have had great success in this world and, perhaps, been sorely tried, yet he has had God's own peace and joy in his soul and shall inherit everlasting life.

37. "What shall a man give in exchange for his life?" If he loses it by refusing to let Jesus save him it is gone forever; the great gulf is fixed and they cannot pass from one place to the other. "Because there is wrath, beware lest He take thee away with His stroke; then a great ransom cannot deliver thee." (Job xxxvi, 18.) "They that trust in their wealth and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches; none of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him." (Ps. xlix, 6, 7.) There is only one ransom; God has provided it, even the finished work of the Lord Jesus (Job xxxiii, 24; Matt. xx, 28); that being refused there is no other (Acts iv, 12). The life of every individual has three stages, that portion which is spent here in the mortal body; that between death and resurrection, and that after the resurrection. If the first stage is yielded to Jesus, then between death and resurrection the spirit is with Christ in Paradise, and at the resurrection of the just the soul and body are wanted to be with and like Christ forever; but if the first stage is misspent and withheld from Jesus then is the future of that soul dark and awful.

38. "Of him shall the Son of Man be ashamed," The Christ will return in power and great glory (Matt. xxvi, 64; Col. iii, 4), bringing His saints with him. He shall come in flaming fire, yielding vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the Gospel (II Th. i, 7-10); and not only so, but when He comes to the air for His people many of them shall be ashamed if He finds them mixed up with the world and worldly things instead of separate therefrom, and watching for Him.

IX, 1. "Some of them that stand here shall not taste of death, till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power." And after six days He fulfilled this word to three of them when on the mount of transfiguration they were eye witnesses of His majesty. (II Peter i, 16.)

DOROTHY Q.

Dorothy Q. is a dainty maid,
As forth, in silks and laces arrayed,
She comes upon the ball room floor
Fairer to me than Helen of yore.
For surely no knight of the times gone by
E'er loved their lady so truly as I.

And now as she flits in the maxy dance
With another man, her slightest glance
At her partner fills me with deep distrust
And gives my weak heart a rancorous thrust.
For oh, my passion's so hard to control
Since Dorothy's mistress of heart and soul.

Why is it, you ask me, I don't declare
My love to one who's so delvoant,
And thus put an end to my fearful doubt,
Even though my vows she may scornfully scout?
Why is it I send not my heart's jealous strife?
If I must tell the reason—she is my wife.

—Detroit Free Press.

LADY AND THE PANTHER.

We were anxious to leave Bombay for two very good reasons. First, on account of the great heat, which had been intensely uncomfortable this season, while the rainfall had been very deficient in quantity; and, secondly, because of an almost unheard of visitation, a regular plague of musquitoes. The pernicious culex was of a much larger size than we have been accustomed to, and their bite venomous in the extreme, so that I gladly accepted an invitation from our friends, the S——'s, to visit them at a picturesque spot situated a short distance from Khandala. This arrangement suited us admirably, as we had already made up our minds to proceed as soon as I could get away to Matheran, a delightful hill resort, with a fine bracing air, situated in the Ghauts, and which affords an agreeable relief during the hot season to a large number of jaded Bombay officials.

On my arrival at Belle Vista, I found that some other of S——'s friends had unexpectedly asked to be put up, and were indeed occupying the spare room of the bungalow. I therefore insisted that no change should be made in the family arrangements on my account. At my earnest solicitation I was allowed to have my way, and take up my quarters in a cool, inviting tent erected about thirty yards from the house, and which I found mine host was using as a study. The removal of his books was the work of a few minutes and these were quickly replaced by the necessary furniture of a bedroom. I soon found everything arranged to my mind, and I congratulated myself upon having secured the coolest and most delightful sleeping apartment in the place. The lookout from the door was one of exceptional beauty. The moon shone out clear and soft over the whole landscape before me.

Having done a great deal that day, I was very tired, so I soon prepared for bed. My little fox terrier Fidget, my only companion, took up her usual place at the foot of my bed. I crept under the musquito curtains and sank into a sound sleep. In about an hour I was awakened by the growling and barking of Fidget. I looked sleepily up and thought I saw an animal of some kind standing at the foot of my bed. I roused myself a little, clapped my hands and made a noise. This made the beast hurry away. I turned over and was once more fast asleep. I was not, however, permitted to enjoy this very long; faithful little Fidget soon set up a fiercer bark than before. I started up and shouted, and I soon had the satisfaction of seeing what I now thought to be either a wild cat or a pie dog slink out through the chink left in the tent. I must have been very sleepy, as I never for a moment thought I was in any danger, and again I lay down and went off to sleep. But my little dog was on the watch, and for the third time I was awakened and startled by her loud barking.

This time, I became wide awake directly, and by the light of the moon I caught sight of a big animal standing in the doorway of my tent. I had no longer any doubt as to my midnight visiter; it was a huge panther. Its eyes were flashing fire, and it was lashing its long tail furiously to and fro, as if it really meant mischief. In a moment more it seemed on the point of making a spring at me, and I could no longer doubt that it was bent on making a meal on my dog and myself. I in no way, however, lost my presence of mind, as I commenced shouting with all my might, which caused the beast to retreat. He walked slowly toward the open door by which he had entered, but only to walk around the outside of the tent and enter by another opening, which brought him somewhat nearer to the bed. I stretched out my hand and clutched at my candles and matches and quickly struck a light. This, together with my shouting and the dog's barking, startled the animal, and he again disappeared. I also took in my traveling clock, thinking that if the worst came to the worst, I could at least give the creature a good blow.

I looked at the time to see if it was near day, and found to my horror that it was only a quarter to 2. I felt my hair would turn gray if I sat all night shouting at a panther every five minutes; besides, he seemed so unusually daring I was not certain that he would stand such trifling any longer, so I felt courage was required, and I must either get help or do something to pass the rest of the night in safety; but the worst was I had to come out of my protective curtains to do so, for a tent is such a deadener of sound I knew no one could hear me from there. So out I jumped, securing Fidget well under the curtains, and ran to the brightest doorway, and screamed first for one and then the other at the top of my voice. I put my hand to my mouth; I called in every way I could think, but not a soul heard me.

The servants were too far away, and the S——'s, whose room looked on my side, were too fast asleep, with their windows shut. So I made up my mind I could stay there no longer, as any minute I felt the beast might return. So I made a dash for my dressing gown, slipped into my slippers, tucked my dog under my arm, and ran for my life. Unfortunately, I could not tell where the animal was, and the dark shrubbery, with trees overhead, looked just the place for him to hide; but I had to take my chances, and I felt I had more in making a run than staying where I was. I shall never forget that run. I ran as if fifty bulls were behind me, leaving my slippers on the path, and, tumbling up the steps, I ran into the veranda panting. I rushed to the door, which was locked from the rest of the house, and, knocking loudly, called out "Mr. S——, there is a panther in my tent." You can imagine the commotion; every one was about in a few seconds; the gentlemen all seized their guns, and ran out to see if there was any chance of a shot and I was made a great fuss of; every one said what a wonderful escape I had had.

They saw no more of the panther, but the next morning we heard that he made for the house of another friend some distance off, and there he attempted to carry off a big English bulldog, which he found asleep in the inner veranda. Fortunately the cries of the dog brought the servants to the rescue, but not before its throat and face had been frightfully mauled. My friends are all of the opinion that the musquito curtains saved my life. The beast was evidently very hungry, and was at one moment preparing to spring upon us, but he was puzzled at my surroundings and probably took them for some kind of a trap. But I never for a moment lost my presence of mind; this and the watchfulness of my little dog enabled me to beat a safe retreat and escape the jaws of my midnight visitor.—A. in The Queen.

A Provencal Wolf Story.

An old wolf who had become deaf and blind from weight of years, having occasion to make a journey through a forest, caused one of his young ones to go before him, taking the young one's tail in his mouth to guide him.

In this way the old wolf made very good progress through the woods; but a passing hunter, seeing the strange procession, fired at the young wolf.

The shot missed his body, but cut off the young wolf's tail, and the animal, greatly frightened, ran off as fast as his legs could carry him.

The old wolf, who, of course, had neither heard nor seen anything of the affair, stood wondering what the young one was waiting for. Whereupon the hunter came up, and taking the young wolf's detached tail in his hand, started home with it.

The old wolf trotted along contentedly after him, and the villagers, seeing the hunter enter the village with the beast in tow, were greatly astonished.

The wolf was placed in captivity, and died soon after. And the villagers have ever since repeated to strangers the story of this wonderful adventure—which the strangers are at liberty to believe or not, as they please.—Youth's Companion.

Why a Lobster Is Red.

In all crustaceans, as, indeed, in almost everything in nature, there is a certain per cent. of iron. Upon boiling the lobster the iron is oxidized. This effect is largely due also to the percentage of muriatic acid which exists naturally in the shell. The chemical change which takes place here is almost similar to that which occurs in the burning of a brick. In boiling a lobster its coat comes to be living substance, and to a certain extent it takes a new character. It is as a [illegible] Lobster. The effect [illegible] is comparatively, as far best of that chemistry, though more intense, is not considered sufficiently to produce the result. The sun also exercises a bleaching influence, which consumes the oxide almost as fast as it is formed, leaving the shell white or nearly pure lime.—Washington Republic.

Puns and Punsters.

Both Hood and Hook—perhaps we might add Porson also—were punsters by profession. But there are puns extant by unknown authors which either might have felt a pride in owning. A Cambridge fellow, walking with a visitor, met by chance the master of St. John's on horseback. "Who is that?" inquired the visitor. "That," replied the other, "is St. John's head on a charger." We are given instances of puns which have only one defect, they are too witty to be used. Thus "the heir of the duke of Penthievre died in 1764, ruined by an attachment to an opera singer, Mlle. Mire." The wits of Paris made his epitaph of five notes of music—"Mi re fa mi la"—"Mire has brought him there." San Francisco Argonaut.

Yes, They Disagree.

A well known physician of this city, finding himself rather "out of sorts," determined to consult some of his medical brethren on the subject, for few physicians like to trust themselves with themselves. He accordingly called upon five eminent members of the faculty in succession, and it is a positive fact that each one of them gave a different opinion as to the nature of his disorder, and recommended a different mode of treatment. It is his own belief that they were all wrong.—New York Ledger.

Buffalo Bill's Ranch.

"Buffalo Bill's" ranch is located on the North Platte, in Nebraska, and contains nearly five thousand acres of fine land. Mr. Cody has about two hundred head of thoroughbred horses and two to three thousand head of cattle. His residence is a big frame house near the railroad, on the roof of which is painted in large letters, "Col. W. F. Cody's 'Buffalo Bill' Scouts' Ranch," and over it every day there floats a big American flag.—Philadelphia Times.

The annual report of the Indian department of Canada says, there are encouraging indications that the Indian element will eventually become amalgamated with the general population of the country. The Indian population of the Dominion is 124,589.

WHAT ON EARTH

Is the reason people will not, can not, or do not see any difference in cheap nostrums put up by Cheap John houses or irresponsible parties at enormous profits, rather than take a medicine of world wide reputation and one that is giving universal satisfaction at equal price? No medicine in the world is giving such unparalleled satisfaction for purifying the blood as BEGGS' BLOOD PURIFIER & BLOOD MAKER, and every bottle that does not do its work will cost you nothing.

LONG LIFE.

There is nothing in the world more generally desired than long life, yet the majority of people put off caring for their health—not because they are really careless, but because we live our lives at such a pace we have not time to give the subject sufficient thought until we recive a reminder in the shape of a severe illness.

Then, too, we are constantly bewildered by the various schools of medicine, and the physicians who represent them, and often blunder in our choice of a doctor.

If people only knew that the very best health-keeper, life-preserver, and disease-preventer that has yet been discovered, is simered down into a concentrated and very palatable form in the shape of New Style Pleasant Taste Vinegar Bitters, they would not hesitate a moment to try it.

But they do not know. How can they know, when so many not only worthless, but positively injurious drugs are constantly flooding the market under various names and guises, that the New Style Vinegar Bitters is as bad as any of them.

They do not know, of course, unless they have courage to try the New Style. It straightens out a tangled up system in a very short while, and those who buy it once buy it always.

Why dont you try it, reader? It is sent out by a responsible house, and is exactly as represented. It costs but one dollar for a very large bottle. Try it at once and you will never be so glad of anything in your life. Your druggists may not have it, but he will order it for you. Be sure it says New Style Pleasant Taste on carton and bottle before you take it. Try it, and you will feel happier than if you had found a gold mine—of health.

Marquette isn't exactly the new Jerusalem, but her streets are being paved with gold just the same. It's combined with rock at the rate of $4 per ton, but it would cost more than that figure to extract the precious stuff and that's the reason it's being used for paving purposes.

One load was from the Anheuser-Busch company, of St. Louis, and the other from the Joseph Schlitz company, of Milwaukee. The sheriff has removed the beer to a storage house to await trial. The value of the beer is about $1,000, and is the largest seizure ever made here. The Larrabee Libel Case.

DES MOINES, Feb. 23.—The Larabee libel case was resumed Friday morning. But two witnesses were examined during the day. The only interesting event was the offering in evidence of a letter written by Judge Cole, who is now associated with the governor's counsel, in which he states his belief that Turney was sentenced to the penitentiary for an aggregate of seventeen years, without any trial by jury or the court, and that the proceedings of the trial were merely formal.

A GREAT MAGAZINE.

The Century for 1889.

THE question has often been asked, "to what does The Century owe its great circulation?" The Christian Union once answered this by the statement that "it has been fairly won, not by advertising schemes, but by the excellence which characterizes it in every department." In their announcements for the coming year the publishers state that it has always been their desire to make The Century the one indispensable periodical of its class, so that whatever other publication might be desirable in the family, The Century could not be neglected by those who wish to keep abreast of the times in all matters pertaining to culture. And the unprecedented circulation of the magazine would seem to be the response of the public to this intention.

With the November number The Century begins its thirty-seventh volume. Two great features of the magazine which are to continue throughout the new volume are already well known to the public, the Lincoln history and the papers on "Siberia and the Exile System." The first of these, written by Messrs. Nicolay and Hay, President Lincoln's private secretaries, contains the inside history of the dark days of the war, as seen from the White House.

THE SIBERIAN PAPERS,

by George Kennan, are attracting the attention of the civilized world. The Chicago Tribune says that "no other magazine articles printed in the English language just now touch upon a subject which so vitally interests all thoughtful people in Europe and America and Asia." As is already known, copies of The Century entering Russia have these articles torn out by the customs officials on the frontier.

DURING 1889

The Century will publish the most important art feature that has yet found place in its pages. It is the result of four years' work of Mr. Timothy Cole, the leading magazine engraver of the world, in the galleries of Europe, engraving from the originals the greatest pictures by the old masters. A series of papers on Ireland, its customs, landscapes, etc., will appear, and there are to be illustrated articles on Bible scenes, treating especially the subjects of the International Sunday-School Lessons. George W. Cable will write "Strange, True Stories of Louisiana." There will be novelettes and short stories by leading writers, occasional articles on war subjects (supplemental to the famous "War Papers" by General Grant and others, which have been appearing in The Century), etc., etc.

The Century costs four dollars a year, and it is published by The Century Co., of New York, who will send a copy of the full prospectus to any one on request.

St. Nicholas for 1889.

PEOPLE who have the idea that St. Nicholas Magazine is only for little children should look over the prospectus of that magazine for 1889, and they will discover that it is for children of all ages, "from five to eighty-five," as some one recently said of it. Indeed, while St. Nicholas is designed for girls and boys, it might almost be called a "family magazine," for the grown-up members of a household will find much to interest them in every number.

The editor, Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, calls the next volume an "all-round-the-world year," because it is to contain so many illustrated papers about the world in general—not dry geographical papers, but stories and sketches and tales of travel and adventure by land and sea—and all illustrated by the best artists. The features will include a serial story, "How We Made the Farthest North," by Gen. A. W. Greely, the well-known commander of the Greely Expedition; a serial about Canada, by Mrs. Catherwood, who is writing a serial story for The Century this year; "Indians of the Amazon," by Mrs. Frank R. Stockton. There are many papers about Europe, including a Christmas story of life in Norway, by H. H. Boyesen; articles on Holland and the Dutch, by Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge; "The Queen's Navy," by Lieut. F. Harrison Smith, R. N., with illustrations of many of England's finest war ships; "The Winchester School," illustrated by Joseph Pennell; "English Railway Trains," by Wm. H. Rideing, etc., etc. The French papers include "Ferdinand de Lesseps and his two Ship Canals," and there are several interesting contributions on German, Italian and Russian subjects.

Under "Asia," comes "Boys and Girls in China," by Yan Phou Lee (a recent graduate of Yale); "Home Life in the East," by Mrs. Holman Hunt, and a number of papers about Japan. Under "Africa" there is a sketch of Henry M. Stanley, by Noah Brooks, and several stories about Egypt. Australia is not forgotten, nor the islands of the sea, and there are even to be stories of under the sea.

Of course the bulk of the contents will relate to American subjects, as usual. Mrs. Burnett, the author of "Little Lord Fauntleroy," contributes a story of New York called "Little Saint Elizabeth," there will be papers describing how the government offices are conducted, papers about athletics, amateur photography, etc. The full prospectus will be sent to any one who wishes to see it by the publishers, The Century Co., of New York.

The couple recently said of St. Nicholas, the family "without it is only half blessed."

When Spring Comes

This is the way a horse and a poor blanket look at the end of winter.

Why is it that of two horse blankets which look and feel equally well one won't wear at all, and the other wears well?

This 5/A Trade Mark shows why.

Horse Blankets which are strong and have a reputation are always imitated in poor qualities which look like them, but having fewer warp threads are not as strong.

Some dealers buy these poor imitations for a few cents less and by saying they are "just as good," sell them at the same price as the strong blankets to parties who do not know the difference.

You cannot tell whether horse blankets are strong by the look or feel, as the warp threads do not show on the face. How then are you to know?

In order that you can tell a strong blanket from a weak one, the manufacturer of 5/A Horse Blankets sews the above 5/A Trade Mark inside of each blanket. This is a guarantee that it is the strongest blanket made for the money and will wear well.

Many poor imitations have been sold as 5/A blankets. Remember none are genuine unless the 5/A Trade Mark is sewed inside.

A Model Newspaper

THE NEW YORK MAIL AND EXPRESS

The Advocate of the Best Interests of the Home—The Enemy of the Saloon. The Friend of American Labor. The Favorite Newspaper of People of Refined Tastes Everywhere.

The New York MAIL AND EXPRESS, the favorite American newspaper of many people of intelligent and cultivated tastes, has recently made some noteworthy improvements, materially increasing its general excellence. It is in the broadest sense

A National Newspaper,

most carefully edited, and adapted to the wants and tastes of intelligent readers throughout the entire country—North, South, East and West. It is a thoroughly clean paper, free from the corrupting, sensational and demoralizing trash, miscalled news, which defiles the pages of too many city papers.

OUR POLITICS.

We believe the Republican party to be the true instrument of the POLITICAL PROGRESS of the American people; and holding that the honest enforcement of its principles is the best guarantee of the national welfare, we shall support them with all our might; but we shall always treat opposing parties with consideration and fair play.

AGAINST THE SALOON.

The MAIL AND EXPRESS is the recognized National organ of the great Anti-Saloon Republican movement. It believes that the liquor traffic as it exists to-day in the United States is the enemy of society, a fruitful source of corruption in politics, the ally of anarchy, a school of crime, and, with its avowed purpose of seeking to corruptly control elections and legislation, is a menace to the public welfare and deserves the condemnation of all good men.

Clinton Lodge No. 175, F. & A. M. meets Saturday evening, March 9. Clinton Chapter meets Tuesday evening, March 12.

It is reported that John Fisher's little son is very sick.

The "Wild West" show last Friday reflected more credit on the one who consented to be the principal actor than on any of those who planned and perpetrated the joke, notwithstanding that the victim goes around with a beardless face and a shaven head. Great inventive genius was displayed and the plan of action was most admirable it is true, but at the same time it was a splendid illustration of the old saying, "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do." The same thing might be said of the young men who induced an innocent spectator of the above named entertainment to leave town under the impression that the officers of the law were after him on the simple charge of witnessing the affair. While the whole thing was undoubtedly done "for fun" it cannot be denied that it was pretty rough for those on whom the jokes were played.

OBITUARY.

The funeral services of Mrs. Mary E. Smalledge, were held in the Universalist church on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 17th, 1889. She was born in Tecumseh, Mich., Sept. 28th, 1846. and always resided in the place. Her maiden name was Mary E. VanDueser. She was married to Wm. Smalledge, at Hillsdale, Mich., April 21st, 1866. United with the first Universalist church of Tecumseh, Feb. 7th, 1881, and departed this life Feb. 15th, 1889. She was a loving and faithful wife and mother. She was a friend to the almost friendless, and none sought her aid in vain when she was able to comply. She was somewhat in spirit like Mary of Bethany, and her friendship and fidelity has perfumed many souls, besides those of the loved ones of her own home. A husband, two daughters and a son, now constitute the family circle, but the large attendance at the church, besides that of her mother, sister and husband, brother and wife, and her husband's mother, brother and two sisters, other relatives, friends, neighbors and acquaintances, assure she had a warm place in many human hearts. Now that she is gone, with Whittier, in love and friendship let us sing

"Fold her, O Father, in thine arms,
And let her henceforth be
A messenger of love between
Our human hearts and thee."

Mrs. Orpha Wilson was born in Stark Co., Ill., June 15, 1852 and died of cancer in the stomach, Thursday, Feb. 14 1889.

Through the long months of her painful illness she bore her severe suffering with christian fortitude. Noble and generous by nature, the love of Christ so enriched her character as to make her a woman of great sympathetic power. Her character and life work were characterized by intense moral earnestness. Injustice and wrong always called from her an indignant protest. But hers was no selfish nature. Righteous indignation burned with equal intensity against evil as such even though she did not personally suffer from it. The cause of temperance had no more earnest advocate than she. When occasion offered she could write or speak words that glowed from an intense appreciation of the enormity of the rum curse, a woman's sympathy for the victims among the helpless and innocent and a painful sense of the moral apathy of the public conscience. Her highest ambition was to be a true mother in the broadest sense of that broadest word. She believed that the greatest of all moral powers is the christian home. In Bryant she found a congenial spirit and next to the Bible perhaps found most help from him. She could not remember the time when she had not loved Christ and led a life of prayer. She was baptized and joined the M. E. church at Tipton in 1886. She was married at her home in Illinois to Elmer A. Wilson, Sept. 6, 1874. Since then living with her husband in Franklin, Lenawee Co., Mich. She leaves three children, Mabel, Ralph and Hazel and her husband to mourn their loss and cherish the memory of a loving, kind and wise mother and wife. The funeral services were held at the house in North Franklin, Sunday, Feb. 17th, by her pastor, Rev. T. E. Pearce, assisted by a former pastor, Rev. A. B. Storms.

A Provencal Wolf Story.

An old wolf who had become deaf and blind from weight of years, having occasion to make a journey through a forest, caused one of his young ones to go before him, taking the young one's tail in his mouth to guide him.

In this way the old wolf made very good progress through the woods, but a passing hunter, seeing the strange procession, fired at the young wolf.

The shot missed his body, but cut off the young wolf's tail, and the animal, greatly frightened, ran off as fast as his legs could carry him.

The old wolf, who, of course, had neither heard nor seen anything of the affair, stood wondering what the young one was waiting for. Whereupon the hunter came up, and taking the young wolf's detached tail in his hand, started home with it.

The old wolf trotted along contentedly after him, and the villagers, seeing the hunter enter the village with the beast in tow, were greatly astonished.

The wolf was placed in captivity, and died soon after. And the villagers have ever since repeated to strangers the story of this wonderful adventure—which the strangers are at liberty to believe or not, as they please.—Youth's Companion.

Why a Lobster Is Red.

In all crustaceans, as, indeed, in almost everything in nature, there is a certain per cent. of iron. Upon boiling the lobster the iron is oxidized. This effect is largely due also to the percentage of muriatic acid which exists naturally in the shell. The chemical change which takes place here is almost similar to that which occurs in the burning of a brick. In boiling a lobster its coat ceases to be a living substance, and to a certain extent it takes a new character. It is as a brick would be after burning. This effect can also be produced by the sun, but necessarily not so rapidly, as the heat of that luminary, although more intense, is not concentrated sufficiently to produce the result. The sun also exercises a bleaching influence, which consumes the oxide almost as fast as it is formed, leaving the shell white or nearly pure lime.—Washington Republic.

Puns and Punsters.

Both Hood and Hook—perhaps we might add Porson also—were punsters by profession. But there are puns extant by unknown authors which either might have felt a pride in owning. A Cambridge fellow, walking with a visitor, met by chance the master of St. John's on horseback. "Who is that?" inquired the visitor. "That," replied the other, "is St. John's head on a charger." We are given instances of puns which have only one defect, they are too witty to be used. Thus "the heir of the duke of Penthievre died in 1764, ruined by an attachment to an opera singer, Mlle. Mire." The wits of Paris made his epitaph of five notes of music—"Mi re fa mi la"—"Mire has brought him there." —San Francisco Argonaut.

Yes, They Disagree.

A well known physician of this city, finding himself rather "out of sorts," determined to consult some of his medical brethren on the subject, for few physicians like to trust themselves with themselves. He accordingly called upon five eminent members of the faculty in succession, and it is a positive fact that each one of them gave a different opinion as to the nature of his disorder, and recommended a different mode of treatment. It is his own belief that they were all wrong.—New York Ledger.

Buffalo Bill's Ranch.

"Buffalo Bill's" ranch is located on the North Platte, in Nebraska, and contains nearly five thousand acres of fine land. Mr. Cody has about two hundred head of thoroughbred horses and two to three thousand head of cattle. His residence is a big frame house near the railroad, on the roof of which is painted in large letters, "Col. W. F. Cody's (Buffalo Bill) Scouts' Ranch," and over it every day there floats a big American flag.—Philadelphia Times.

PRESIDENT HARRISON IN CHARGE.

Washington and the Remainder of the United States Turn Out to Watch the Great American March Moving.

The Rain to the Contrary Notwithstanding The President's Inaugural Refers Significantly to the Southern Question, Upholds the Monroe Doctrine, and Is Not at All Obscure on Civil Service Reform or Protective Tariff. President Cleveland Courteously Sees the New Occupant of the White House Installed in Possession.

WASHINGTON CITY, March 5.—In the presence of a vast concourse of loyal Americans, surrounded by the men whose wisdom and ability have lifted them to high positions in the service of the nation, the scene robbed of some of its brilliance by a persistent drizzle of rain, but the multitude not a whit the less enthusiastic on that account, Benjamin Harrison yesterday at noon took the oath that made him twenty-sixth president of the United States, then delivered his inaugural address, and turning from the cheers that split the heavens as he spoke his final words, kissed his wife.

In the senate chamber, which was, as it were, the initial point of the ceremonies of the days preparations had been made for the proceedings, and seats had been assigned the different bodies of men who were to be witnesses of them—the president and president-elect, the diplomatic corps, senators and representatives all had their positions laid out on the floor, and in the galleries other positions had been assigned for the president and president-elect's wives and other favored guests. Among those who had been honored with a seat on the floor of the chamber was the venerable ex-Vice President Hamlin.

Those who were expected began coming in early and as the notables made their appearance ripples of applause broke forth in spite of the efforts of Presiding Officer Ingalls to preserve the solemn decorum that is traditional of the chamber. By 11 o'clock all the seats assigned were occupied, except those set apart for the outgoing and incoming presidents and vice president. They arrived in the following order: President Cleveland, a moment before noon, escorted by Senator Cockrell and the venerable Capt. Bassett, and followed by the outgoing cabinet; Gen. Harrison, on the arm of Senator Hoar, announced by Capt. Bassett as "the president-elect of the United States." As these two distinguished arrivals were announced the audience arose, and the same ceremony was repeated upon the arrival of Vice President-elect Morton, who advanced to the chair and was duly sworn in as vice president, the retiring president of the senate, Ingalls, administering the oath. Ingalls then in a few graceful words delivered his charge over to Morton, and as the hands of the senate clock pointed to high noon, announced the dissolution of the Fiftieth senate. Vice President Morton then took the chair and having had read the call for a special session of the Fifty-First senate the members were sworn in, and the new presiding officer delivered the usual brief address of greeting to the body over which he had been called to preside for four years.

THE IMPORTANT EVENT.

Administration of the Oath to the New President—His Inaugural Address.

Then came the principal event of the day. The procession to the platform at the east front of the capitol was formed with Marshal Wright, of the supreme court, in the lead, the others in the chamber taking the positions assigned them, the president and president-elect being first in front of the senate. Upon reaching the platform the president-elect advanced with Chief Justice Fuller to the front, a place near by being reserved for Mrs. Harrison and the other members of the general's family.

With uplifted right hand Gen. Harrison then took the oath of office, repeating the words distinctly and without tremor after the chief justice, kissed the book, and turning to the sea of faces before, paused for a moment before commencing his inaugural address.

He had to pause. As the last words of the solemn oath died away there arose an acclaim that swelled from the front of the great throng to the far-distant rear, growing in volume as it went until the roar that ascended was as the sound of many waters. From the throats of the tens of thousands came the salute that once to hear in some man's honor would seem to be glory enough for that man.

It was some moments before silence, which following such a tumult was impressive, was obtained, and then Gen. Harrison spoke as follows:

There is no constitutional or legal requirement that the president shall take the oath of office in the presence of the people. But there is so manifest an appropriateness in the public induction to office of the chief executive officer of the nation that from the beginning of the government of the people, to whose service the official oath consecrates the officer, have been called to witness the solemn ceremonial. The oath taken in the presence of the people becomes a mutual covenant. The officer covenants to serve the whole body of the people by a faithful execution of the laws, so that they may be the unfailing defense and security of those who respect and observe them, and that neither wealth, station, nor the power of combinations shall be able to evade their just penalties or to wrest them from a beneficent public purpose to serve the ends of cruelty or selfishness. My promise is spoken; your's unspoken—but not the less real and so emn. The people of every state have here their representatives. Surely I do not misinterpret the spirit of the occasion when I assume that the whole body of the people covenant with me and with each other to-day to support and defend the constitution and the union of the States, to yield willing obedience to all the laws, and each to every other citizen his equal, civil and political rights. Entering thus solemnly into covenant with each other, we may reverently invoke and confidently expect the favor and help of Almighty God, that He will give to me wisdom, strength and fidelity, and to our people a spirit of fraternity and a love of righteousness and peace.

This occasion derives peculiar interest from the fact that the presidential term, which begins this day, is the twenty-sixth under our constitution. The first inauguration of President Washington took place in New York, where congress was then sitting, on the 30th day of April, 1789, having been deferred by reason of delays attending the organization of the congress and the canvass of the electoral vote. Our people have already worthily observed the centennials of the Declaration of Independence, of the battle of Yorktown and of the adoption of the constitution; and will shortly celebrate in New York the institution of the second great department of our constitutional scheme of government. When the centennial of the institution of the judicial department by the organization of the supreme court, shall have been suitably observed, as I trust it will be, our nation will have fully entered its second century.

I will not attempt to note the marvelous, and, in great part, happy contrasts between our country as it steps over the threshold into its second century of organized existence under the constitution, and that weak but wisely ordered young nation that looked undauntedly down the first century, when all its years stretched out before it. Our people will not fail at this time to recall the incidents which accompanied the institution of government under the constitution, or to find inspiration and guidance in the teachings and example of Washington and his great associates, and hope and courage in the contrast which thirty-eight populous and prosperous states offer to the thirteen states, weak in everything except courage and the love of liberty, that then fringed our Atlantic seaboard.

The territory of Dakota has now a population greater than any of the original states (except Virginia), and greater than the aggregate of five of the smaller states in 1790. The center of population, when our national capital was located, was east of Baltimore, and it was argued by many well-informed persons that it would move eastward rather than westward. Yet in 1890 it was found to be near Cincinnati, and in the new census, about to be taken, will show another stride to the westward. That which was the body has come to be only the rich fringe of the nation's robe. But our growth has not been limited to territory, population and aggregate wealth, marvelous as it has been in each of these directions. The masses of our people are better fed, clothed and housed than their fathers were. The facilities for popular education have been vastly enlarged and more generally diffused. The virtues of courage and patriotism have given recent proof of their continued presence and increasing power, in the hearts and over the lives of our people. The influences of religion have been multiplied and strengthened. The sweet offices of charity have greatly increased. The virtue of temperance is held in higher estimation. We have not attained an ideal condition. Not all our people are happy and prosperous; not all of them are virtuous and law-abiding. But, on the whole, the opportunities offered to the individual to secure the comforts of life are better than are found elsewhere and largely better and they were 100 years ago.

The surrender of a large measure of sovereignty to the general government, effected by the adoption of the constitution, was not accomplished until the suggestions of reason were strongly reinforced by the more imperative voice of experience. The divergent interests of peace speedily demanded a "more perfect union." The merchant, the shipmaster, and the manufacturer discovered and disclosed to our statesmen and to the people that commercial emancipation must be added to the political freedom which had been so bravely won. The commercial policy of the mother country had not relaxed any of its hard and oppressive features. To hold in check the development of our commercial marine, to prevent or retard the establishment and growth of manufactures in the states and so to secure the American market for their shops and the carrying trade for their ships, was the policy of European statesmen, and was pursued with the most selfish vigor. Petitions poured in upon congress urging the imposition of discriminating duties that should encourage the production of needed things at home. The patriotism of the people, which no longer found a field of exercise in war, was energetically directed to the duty of equipping the young republic for the defense of its independence by making its people self-dependent. Societies for the promotion of home manufactures and for encouraging the use of domestics in the dress of the people were organized in many of the states. The revival at the end of the century of the same patriotic interest in the preservation and development of domestic industries, and the defense of our working people against injurious foreign competition is an incident worthy of attention. It is not a departure, but a return that we have witnessed. The protective policy had then its opponents. The argument was made as now that its benefits inured to particular classes or sections. If the question became in any sense or at any time sectional, it was only because slavery existed in some parts of the states. But for this there was no reason why the cotton producing states should not have fed or walked abreast with the New England states in the production of cotton fabrics. There was this reason only why the states that divide with Pennsylvania the mineral treasures of the great southeastern and central mountain ranges should have been so tardy in bringing to the smelting furnace and to the mill the coal and iron from their near opposing hillsides. Mill fires were lighted at the funeral pile of slavery. The emancipation proclamation was heard in the depths of the earth, as well as in the sky; men were made free and material things became our better servants. The sectional element has happily been eliminated from the tariff discussion. We have no longer states that are necessarily only planting states. None are excluded from achieving that diversification of pursuit among the people which brings wealth and contentment. The cotton plantation will not be less valuable when the product is spun in the country towns by operatives whose necessities call for diversified crops and create a home demand for garden and agricultural products. Every new mine, furnace and factory is an extension of the productive capacity of the state more real and valuable than added territory.

Shall the prejudices and parasitism of slavery continue to hang upon the skirts of progress? How long will those, who rejoice that slavery no longer exists, cherish or tolerate the incapacities it put upon their communities? I look hopefully to the continuance of our protective system, and to the consequent development of manufacturing and mining enterprises in the states hitherto wholly given to agriculture, as a potent influence in the perfect unification of our people. The men who have invested their capital in these enterprises, the farmers who have felt the benefit of their neighborhood, and the men who work in shop or field, will not fail to find and defend a community of interest. Is it not quite possible that the farmers and the promoters of the great mining and manufacturing enterprises, which have recently been established in the south, may yet find that the free ballot of the workingman, without distinction of race, is needed for their defense as well as for his own? I do not doubt that if the men in the south, who now accept the tariff views of Clay and the constitutional expositions of Webster, would courageously avow and defend their real convictions they would not find it difficult, by friendly instruction and co-operation to make the black man their efficient and safe ally, not only in establishing correct principles in our national administration, but in preserving for their local communities, the benefits of social order and economical administration of the affairs of government. At least until the good offices of kindness and education have been fairly tried, the contrary conclusion can not be plausibly urged.

I have altogether rejected the suggestion of a special executive policy for any section of our country. It is the duty of the executive to administer and enforce, in the methods and by the instrumentalities pointed out and provided by the constitution, all the laws enacted by congress. These laws are general, and their administration should be uniform and equal. As a citizen may not elect what law he will obey, neither may the executive elect which he will enforce. The duty to obey and to execute embraces the constitution in its entirety and the whole code of laws enacted under it. The evil example of permitting individuals, corporations or communities to nullify the laws because they cross some selfish or local interests or prejudices, is full of danger, not only to the nation at large, but much more to those who use this pernicious expedient to escape their just obligations or to obtain an unjust advantage over others. They will presently themselves be compelled to appeal to the law for protection, and those who would use the law as a defense must not deny that use of it to others. If our great corporations would more scrupulously observe their legal limitations and duties, they would have less cause to complain of the unlawful limitations of their rights or of violent interference with their operations. The community that by concert, open or secret, among its citizens denies to a portion of its members their plain rights under the law has severed the only safe bond of social order and

A GREAT MAGAZINE.

The Century for 1889.

THE question has often been asked, "to what does The Century owe its great circulation?" The Christian Union once answered this by the statement that "it has been fairly won, not by advertising schemes, but by the excellence which characterizes it in every department." In their announcements for the coming year the publishers state that it has always been their desire to make The Century the one indispensable periodical of its class, so that whatever other publication might be desirable in the family, The Century could not be neglected by those who wish to keep abreast of the times in all matters pertaining to culture. And the unprecedented circulation of the magazine would seem to be the response of the public to this intention.

With the November number The Century begins its thirty-seventh volume. Two great features of the magazine which are to continue throughout the new volume are already well known to the public, the Lincoln history and the papers on "Siberia and the Exile System." The first of these, written by Messrs. Nicolay and Hay, President Lincoln's private secretaries, contains the inside history of the dark days of the war, as seen from the White House.

THE SIBERIAN PAPERS,

by George Kennan, are attracting the attention of the civilized world. The Chicago Tribune says that "no other magazine articles printed in the English language just now touch upon a subject which so vitally interests all thoughtful people in Europe and America and Asia." As is already known, copies of The Century entering Russia have these articles torn out by the customs officials on the frontier.

DURING 1889

The Century will publish the most important art feature that has yet found place in its pages. It is the result of four years' work of Mr. Timothy Cole, the leading magazine engraver of the world, in the galleries of Europe, engraving from the originals the greatest pictures by the old masters. A series of papers on Ireland, its customs, landscapes, etc., will appear, and there are to be illustrated articles on Bible scenes, treating especially the subjects of the International Sunday-School Lessons. George W. Cable will write "Strange, True Stories of Louisiana." There will be novelettes and short stories by leading writers, occasional articles on war subjects (supplemental to the famous "War Papers" by General Grant and others, which have been appearing in The Century), etc., etc.

The Century costs four dollars a year, and it is published by The Century Co., of New York, who will send a copy of the full prospectus to any one on request.

We notice a new departure in the treatment of disease that promises to revolutionize the medicine business. It consists in the collection of the species used by noted specialists of Europe and America, and bringing them within the reach of all. For instance, the treatment pursued by special physicians who treat indigestion, stomach and liver troubles only, was obtained and preferred. The treatments of other physicians, celebrated for curing catarrh, were procured, and so on till these incomparable cures now include diseases of the lungs, kidneys, female weakness, rheumatism, nervous debility, and piles. Originated and used by specialists, being a positive cure for each disease, these preparations are the best remedies procurable. We advise all to send three two cent stamps to the Chase Medical Specialty Co., 179 West Adams St., Chicago, Ill., and receive by return mail their interesting hand book.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in lining membranes of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proven this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. DIXON & SON, 303 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

A POSITIVE CURE

FOR SKIN DISEASES

Of diseases of the skin there are some 12 or 15 classes, in each class from two to four varieties. These are nourished according to the particular condition of the blood, for disease of the skin means disease of the blood. These are either the result of stomach, liver or kidney difficulties, and for a cure depend upon a healthy action of these organs.

Erysipelas, or St. Anthony's Fire

Is the result of an impure condition of the blood, and for a cure depends, primarily, upon the condition of the stomach, liver and kidneys, and, secondarily upon the condition of the blood as manufactured by these organs.

HIBBARD'S RHEUMATIC SYRUP,

containing POKE, BURDOCK, MANDRAKE, etc., the best known cleansers of the blood, very carefully and scientifically compounded, strikes at the root of the disease, whether of a Scrofulous, Rheumatic or Syphilitic Taint. It is a never failing remedy.

THE SULTAN.

A Sultan sat by Danube's tide
And sore distressed aloud he cried;
While like the waters to the sea
His tears ran down both fast and free.
A passing stranger said: "My friend,
Why do those tears so fast descend?"
"Alas!" he sobbed, "I've lost all hope;
I've lost my cake of IVORY SOAP.
No more in pride through town I'll go,
With garments clean and white as snow;
But in disgrace must move about,
By scornful fingers pointed out."
"Not so," the noble stranger cried;
"I have a piece and will divide;"
And from his coat-tail pocket drew
A cake and broke it fair in two.
Then rose in joy the Sultan gray,
And made that man a Turkish Bey,
With servants kind and Viziers sage,
And fifty wives to cheer his age.

A WORD OF WARNING.

There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

THE PAUPER LOVER'S GIFT.

No Crœsus I, with coffers full of gold
And kingly caskets, filled with precious gems;
No costly gifts my love's white hands enfold,
Upon her brow no gleaming diadems.

If I held sway o'er all the peopled world,
And owned its storied wealth by right divine,
Its richest, rarest treasures would be hurled
Down at the feet of her whom I call mine.

So, since I own nor gold nor jewels rare,
No queenly pearls or rubies royal red
I meekly send this love of mine most fair
A knot of faded violets, instead.

And yet, poor flowers! all withered, dead and torn,
Better than gold and gems and all the rest
I've loved them, in my solitude forlorn—
Because my love once wore them at her breast.

—Chicago Journal.

THE MATCH WENT OUT.

When I was a lad of 17 I was office boy for Pinkerton's Philadelphia agency and was just wild, of course, to be sent out on a case. Every time the captain got a new job I would slide up to him and say: "Cap'n, you'd better let me go out on that," and he would answer with a quizzical grin: "Not this time, Harry. Wait till the next case."

Along in December of that year there was a great rush of business at our office. We had fifteen detectives, all old, experienced hands, and they were on the jump night and day. We could not handle the business that was coming in, and the captain was wishing we had some more men. I remember as well as can be sitting in my chair by the door and the captain calling out in fun from his private office: "I guess we'll have to let you take the next case, Harry."

Hardly had he said the words when the door opened and a raw old countryman entered. He proved to be Joe Baylis, a Montgomery county justice of the peace, and he wanted the captain to send a man down with him to attend to a ghost who was cutting didoes at Fort Washington. The captain told him he would send a man as soon as he had one at his disposal. The old fellow left and I jumped to my feet.

"Captain," I said, "send me on that case."

The captain leaned back in his chair and looked at me hard. "See here, Harry," he said, "suppose I were to send you, what would you do?"

I outlined an elaborate plan of campaign against the ghost. He let me finish and then said:

"You'd make a confounded ass of yourself, now, wouldn't you? You'd make us the laughing stock of the town. Now listen. In the first place, always bear this in mind—there is no such thing as a ghost. If I send you to Fort Washington, go there with that idea in your head. There is no such thing as a ghost. If you see the ghost and get near enough, jump for it. Don't be afraid, it won't hurt you; just jump for it. It will turn out to be a human being—no doubt of that. Now, I'll let you go and try your hand. Don't make a fool of yourself. If you see the ghost and think you can't handle it, lie low and follow it and see who it is."

The captain gave me money and away I went. I felt pretty brave, for it was bright daylight then, but there were times when I wished myself well out of the thing. I got to Fort Washington about 8 o'clock, and inquired the way to the haunted house from the station agent. I found it on a hill about half a mile from the town, and looked it over with interest and apprehension. It was an old white frame mansion standing in park like grounds with plenty of outhouses about it. Some countrymen whom I met told me that the ghost was in the habit of standing on the top of the broad stone wall that skirted the roadway. There was an outhouse so situated that any one concealed in it could overlook the whole stretch of wall from end to end, and I made up my mind that this was the place for me to get into before the ghost made its appearance. Then I went back to the hotel, took my supper and chatted with the waiters and a few loungers about the ghost. I learned that it first appeared about three weeks before my arrival.

A man named McTanish, an ignorant farm hand, was the first person to encounter it. He was coming to the town one night from the grist mill with a sack of meal on his back and paused for a minute in front of the old house to set the bag down on a stump and rest his shoulder. He heard a noise behind him, and turning round, saw standing on the wall a figure he afterward said was thirteen feet high at least. He did not stop to observe the figure very carefully, though, but ran as hard as he knew how down the road. Next night a party of men saw the ghost and they also ran. They said the ghost made after them, breathing fire and brimstone and acting in a peculiarly weird and unholy manner. After that the house was avoided at night, but several strong parties of men, including the selectmen of the town, saw the ghost from a respectful distance. It approached them in each case and in each case they took to their heels.

About dusk I stole down to the deserted house and it was dark when I got there. I slid along the wall to the outhouse, crept cautiously in and shut the door again. Hardly had I shut the door when I knew that there was some other person in that outhouse. I felt sure there was somebody close by my elbow. I was trembling like a leaf, but I managed to pull a match from my pocket and strike it. I held it up. It showed me a big white muffled figure not two feet away. Then the match went out.

Was I scared?

Well, now, I should say so. There are some people who laugh at the idea of a man's hair standing on end. They say it is a physical impossibility, but I know better. I could feel my hair rise right up and lift my hat, and my flesh crept. But I had no time to think. I jumped. I had to jump. I shut my eyes and grabbed for the ghost. I was so frightened I seemed to lose consciousness for a moment, but grabbed something and held on. When the first shock passed I felt the ghost tugging and pulling to get away from me. It seemed as badly [illegible] was and [illegible] were soft and warm.

"Don't hurt me," it said in a terrified voice.

[illegible] voice to reply with. I was [illegible], but I pulled my captive out on [illegible] and looked at it in the moonlight. The sheet that had been muffled about the figure fell to the ground—a pretty girl of 15 was disclosed. I was in a cold perspiration and shaking as if recovering from a shock of electricity, but when I saw that I had caught a real genuine flesh and blood girl and no ghost I began to feel better and presently was able to talk.

"Who are you?" I asked.

"Jennie Baylis."

"What? The daughter of Joe Baylis?"

"Yes, sir."

"What are you doing this for?"

The girl began to cry. She said she had not meant any harm. She and her sister had played ghost just to have some fun. Her sister was usually with her, but did not come this night, as she was too busy. She had heard from her father that a detective was coming to catch the ghost, but thought he was not due for a day or two, and resolved to make one last appearance and then give up the performance till things calmed down.

"Who are you?" she asked.

"I'm the detective," I said.

She looked me over in evident awe and consternation, tinged with some surprise on account of my age.

"What are you going to do with me?"

"I shall have to expose you."

The girl cried again and begged to be released and allowed to go home, but that did not suit me at all. I said she was my prisoner and as such I must deliver her up to the authorities, and after a good deal of waiting she suggested that I had better give her up to her own father. I agreed to that, and picking up her sheet I held her arm and took her with me to her father's house, about a mile distant.

"Don't you know that you might have been killed by some of those people you frightened?" I asked.

"No, sir, I never thought of that. Everybody who saw me ran away."

When we got to the farm house where Jennie lived it was half past 9 o'clock. Everybody was in bed and the lights were all out, but I boldly knocked at the door. A window opened and a man's voice said:

"Whose there?"

"Me."

"Who's me?"

"The detective."

"You're rather late. Why did you not wait until to-morrow? Better come around and see me in the morning."

"I want to see you now. I have the ghost."

At this the window was closed with a bang and I heard hurried steps on the stairs. The door opened and old Baylis stood in the doorway. He was draped in a very long old fashioned white gown and wore a tall steeple shaped night-cap. One hand held up a tin candlestick and the other shaded the light. A circle of beard sweeping under his chin from ear to ear made him look very comical. He looked at me in astonishment, and when he saw his daughter and the sheet I thought he was going into convulsions.

"You, Jennie?" he asked at length.

"Yes, father," said Jennie very humbly.

Old Baylis sighed and said, "Come in."

He sent for the neighbors immediately. I don't know what was said at their meeting, for I was not admitted to it, but old Baylis gave me a letter to the captain and packed me off on the midnight train. Next morning I reached the office early and found all the men present, waiting for the captain to detail them. The men grinned at me and passed the time of day pleasantly enough. They all knew where I had been and anticipated a wonderful tale of disaster and defeat, which they were ready to laugh at, although I was a favorite with them, having done many a piece of extra work for every man there.

"I thought I sent you to Fort Washington, Harry?" said the captain.

"Yes, sir."

"Made an ass of yourself, I suppose?"

"There's a letter, sir."

While the captain read the letter the men guyed me.

"This is a very nice letter, Harry," said the captain. "Boys, the youngster captured the ghost."

"Did he?" said the men.

"Yes, sir, he did." The boy is a credit to us;" and then the captain read the letter of the selectman out loud. At every sentence I grew a foot.

"Well, now, how did you do it?" several inquired.

I told the story, and you can be sure I did not refrain from giving myself plenty of credit. My tale was very highly colored. When it was concluded Long Jim Langdon drawled out:

"Harry, tell the honest truth. Was you frightened when that match went out?"

"No, of course not!" said I. But I was frightened two years later when I asked the ghost to marry me, and thought she was going to say no. However, she didn't.—Philadelphia Times.

Editor Forthoughtly Review—You write very well, sir.

Poor Author—I endeavor to.

"Your essay is a model of English composition, but it would interest no one because no one knows you. You are not a public character. Now, here is an article on 'Pure Americanism,' by Congressman Mike Mulihooly. As he spent most of his early years tending bar he had few educational advantages and his spelling is terrible, while his grammar is horrifying. It is also void of ideas. If you will take the article, retain the title and his signature, but write an entirely new essay of your own on the same subject, I will give you half a dollar. Can't afford to give more than that, because I had to pay Mulihooly $500 to induce him to write at all."—Philadelphia Record.

A CHANGE OF TENANTS.

prosperity. The evil works from a bad center, both ways. It demoralizes those who practice it, and destroys the faith of those who suffer by it in the efficiency of the law as a safe protector. The man in whose breast that faith has been darkened is naturally the subject of dangerous and uncanny suggestions. Those who use unlawful methods, if moved by no higher motive than the selfishness that prompted them may well stop and inquire what is to be the end of this. An unlawful expedient can not become a permanent condition of government. If the educated and influential classes in a community either practice or connive at the systematic violation of laws that seem to cross their convenience, what can they expect when the lesson that convenience of a supposed class interest is a sufficient cause for lawlessness, has been well learned by the ignorant classes? A community where law is the rule of conduct, and where courts, not mobs, execute its penalties, is the only attractive field for business investments and honest labor.

Our naturalization laws should be so amended as to make the inquiry into the character and good disposition of persons applying for citizenship more careful and searching. Our existing laws have been in their administration, an unimpressive and often an unintelligible form. We accept the man as a citizen without any knowledge of his fitness, and he assumes the duties of citizenship without any knowledge as to what they are. The privileges of American citizenship are so great and its duties so grave that we may well insist upon a good knowledge of every person applying for citizenship and a good knowledge by him of our institutions. We should not cease to be hospitable to immigration, but we should cease to be careless as to the character of it. There are men of all races, even to the best, whose coming is necessarily a burden upon our public revenues or a threat to social order. These should be identified and excluded.

We have happily maintained a policy of avoiding all interference with European affairs. We have been only interested spectators of their contentions in diplomacy and in war, ready to use our friendly offices to promote peace, but never obtruding our advice and never attempting unfairly to coin the distresses of other powers into commercial advantage to ourselves. We have a just right to expect that our European policy will be the American policy of European courts. It is so manifestly incompatible with those precautions for our peace and safety which all the great powers habitually observe and enforce in matters affecting them, that a shorter waterway between our eastern and western seaboards should be dominated by any European government, that we may confidently expect that such a purpose will not be entertained by any friendly power. We shall, in the future, as in the past use every endeavor to maintain and enlarge our friendly relations with all the great powers, but they will not expect us to look kindly upon any project that would leave us subject to the dangers of a hostile observation or environment. We have not sought to dominate or to absorb any of our weaker neighbors, but rather to aid and encourage them to establish free and stable governments resting on the consent of their own people. We have a clear right to expect, therefore, that no European government will seek to establish colonial dependencies upon the territory of these independent American states. That which a sense of justice restrains us from seeking they may be reasonably expected willingly to forego.

It must not be assumed, however, that our interests are so exclusively American that our entire inattention to any events that may transpire elsewhere can be taken for granted. Our citizens, domiciled for purposes of trade in all countries and in many of the islands of the seas, demand and will have our adequate care in their personal and commercial rights. The necessities of our navy require convenient coaling stations and dock and harbor privileges. These and other trading privileges we will feel free to obtain only by means that do not in any degree partake of coercion, however feeble the government from which we ask such concessions. But, having fairly obtained them, by methods and for purposes entirely consistent with the most friendly disposition toward all other powers, our consent will be necessary to any modification or impairment of the concession. We shall neither fail to respect the flag of any friendly nation or the just rights of its citizens, nor to exact the like treatment for our own. Calmness, justice and consideration should characterize our diplomacy. The offices of an intelligent diplomacy or of friendly arbitration in proper cases should be adequate to the peaceful adjustment of all international difficulties. By such methods we will make our contribution to the world's peace, which no nation values more highly, and avoid the opprobrium which must fall upon the nation that ruthlessly breaks it.

The duty devolved by law upon the president to nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the senate, to appoint all public officers whose appointment is not otherwise provided for in the constitution or by act of congress, has become very burdensome, and its wise and efficient discharge full of difficulty. The civil list is so large that a personal knowledge of any large number of the applicants is impossible. The president must rely upon the representations of others and these are often made inconsiderately and without any just sense of responsibility. I have a right, I think, to insist that those who volunteer or are invited to give advice as to appointments shall exercise consideration and fidelity. A high sense of duty and an ambition to improve the service should characterize all public officers. There are many ways in which the convenience and comfort of those who have business with our public officers may be promoted by a thoughtful and obliging officer, and I shall expect those whom I may appoint to justify their selection by a conspicuous efficiency in the discharge of their duties. Honorable party service will certainly not be esteemed by me a disqualification for public office, but it will in no case be allowed to serve as a shield of official negligence, incompetency, or delinquency. It is entirely creditable to seek public office by proper methods and with proper motives, and all applicants will be treated with consideration. But I shall need, and the heads of departments will need, time for inquiry and deliberation. Persistent importunity will not, therefore, be the best support of an application for office. Heads of departments, bureaus, and all other public officers, having any duty connected therewith, will be expected to enforce the civil service law fully and without evasion. Beyond this obvious duty I hope to do something more to advance the reform of the civil service. The ideal or even my own ideal, I shall probably not attain. Retrospect will be a safer basis of judgment than promises. We shall not, however, I am sure, be able to put our civil service upon a non-partisan basis until we have secured an incumbency that fair-minded men of the opposition will approve for impartiality and integrity. As the number of such in the civil list is increased removals from office will diminish.

While a surplus represents at the present the gravest evil it is as most easy. Our revenue should be ample to meet the ordinary demands upon our treasury with a sufficient margin for those extraordinary but scarcely less imperative demands which arise now and then. Expenditures should always be made with the economy as the governing principle which should control in all business transactions. But there is in things in the condition of our country and of our people no suggestion that anything necessary to the full prosperity, security or honor should be unduly postponed. It will be the duty of congress wisely to forecast and estimate the extraordinary demands and, having added them to our ordinary expenditures, to so adjust the revenue laws that no considerable annual surplus will remain. We will for a time be able to apply to the redemption of the public debt any small and unforeseen excess of revenue. This is better than to reduce our income below our necessary expenditures with the resulting choice between another change of our revenue laws and an increase of the public debt. It is quite possible, I am sure, to effect the necessary reduction in our revenue without breaking down our protective tariff or seriously injuring any domestic industry.

The construction of a sufficient number of modern war ships and of their necessary armament should progress as rapidly as is consistent with care and perfection in plans and workmanship. The spirit, courage, and skill of our naval officers and seamen have many times in our history given to weak ships and inefficient guns a rating greatly beyond that of the naval list. That they will again do so upon occasion I do not doubt; but they ought not, by premeditation or neglect, to be left to the risks and exigencies of an unequal combat. We should encourage the establishment of American steamship lines. The exchanges of commerce demand stated, reliable, and rapid means of communication, and until these are provided the development of our trade with the states lying south of us is impossible.

Our pension laws should give more adequate and discriminating relief to the Union soldiers and sailors and to their widows and orphans. Such occasions as this should remind us that we owe everything to their valor and sacrifice.

It is a subject of congratulation that there is a near prospect of the admission into the Union of the Dakotas and Montana and Washington territories. This act of justice has been unreasonably delayed in the case of some of them. The people who have settled these territories are intelligent, enterprising and patriotic, and the accession of these new states will add strength to the nation. It is due to the settlers in the territories who have availed themselves of the invitations of our land laws to make homes upon the public domain that their titles should be specially adjusted and their honest entries confirmed by patent.

BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF PARADE FROM STATE, WAR AND NAVY BUILDING.

It is very gratifying to observe the general interest now being manifested in the reform of our election laws. Those who have been for years calling attention to the pressing necessity of throwing about the ballot-box and about the elector further safeguards in order that our elections might not only be free and pure, but might clearly appear to be so, will welcome the accession of any who did not a soon discover the need of reform. The national congress has not as yet taken control of elections in that case over which the constitution gives it jurisdiction, but has accepted and adopted the election laws of the several states, provided penalties for their violation and a method of supervision. Only the inefficiency of the state laws, or an unfair or partisan administration of them, could suggest a departure from this policy. It was clearly, however, in the contemplation of the framers of the constitution that such an exigency might arise, and provision was wisely made for it. The freedom of the ballot is a condition of our national life, and no power vested in congress or in the executive to secure or perpetuate it should remain unused upon occasion. The people of all the congressional districts have an equal interest that the election in each shall truly express the views and wishes of a majority of the qualified electors residing within it. The results of such elections are not local, and the assistance of electors residing in other districts that they shall be pure and free does not savor at all of impertinence. If, in any of the states, the public security is thought to be threatened by ignorance among the electors, a generous remedy is education. The sympathy and help of our people will not be withheld from any community struggling with special embarrassments or difficulties connected with the suffrage, if the remedies proposed proceed upon lawful lines and are promoted by just and honorable methods. How shall those who practice election frauds recover that respect for the sanctity of the ballot which is the first condition and obligation of good citizenship? The man who has come to regard the ballot-box as a juggler's hat has renounced his allegiance.

Let us exalt patriotism and moderate our party contentions. Let those, who would die for the flag on the field of battle, give a better proof of their patriotism and a higher glory to their country by promoting fraternity and justice. A party success that is achieved by unfair methods or by practices that partake of revolution is hurtful and evanescent, even from a party standpoint. We should hold our differing opinions in mutual respect, and, having submitted them to the arbitrament of the ballot, should accept an adverse judgment with the same respect that we should have demanded of our opponents, if the decision had been in our favor.

No other people have a government more worthy of their respect and love or a land so magnificent in extent, so pleasant to look upon, and so full of generous suggestion to enterprise and labor. God has placed upon our head a diadem and has laid at our feet power and wealth beyond definition or calculation. But we must not forget that we take these gifts upon the condition that justice and mercy shall hold the reins of power, and that the upward avenues of hope shall be free to all people.

I do not mistrust the future. Dangers have been in frequent ambush along our path, but we have uncovered and vanquished them all. Passion has swept some of our communities, but only to give us a new demonstration that the great body of our people are stable, patriotic and law-abiding. No political party can long pursue advantage at the expense of public honor or by rude and indecent methods without protest and fatal disaffection in its own body. The peaceful agencies of commerce are more fully revealing the necessary unity of all our communities, and the increasing interchange of our people is promoting mutual respect. We shall find unalloyed pleasure in the revelation which our next census will make of the swift development of the great resources of some of the states. Each state will bring its generous contribution to the great aggregate of the nation's increase.

And, when the harvests from the fields, the cattle from the hills, and the ores of the earth shall have been weighed, counted and valued, we will turn from them all to crown with the highest honor the state that has most promoted education, justice and patriotism among its people.

HARRISON TAKING THE OATH.

ON TO THE WHITE HOUSE.

A Splendid Pageant on a Grand Thoroughfare—The Review.

Pennsylvania avenue is a grand thoroughfare. It has witnessed some magnificent pageants. But never in its history did it witness such a scene—on inauguration day, at least—as that of yesterday.

The new president's address having been finished, he turned straightway to his wife and kissed the proudest woman in America; and she had a right to be proud—the wife of the man whom the American people lift to the great eminence of chief magistrate. This brought forth another great cheer, to which he bowed his acknowledgment, and without further delay, accompanied by the ex-president, he was escorted to a carriage and took his place in the procession to the White House, the other occupants being Mr. Cleveland and two members of the inaugural committee.

Describe the processions? It would require columns. There were five divisions, composed of first, a regular army brigade, naval battalion, marines, etc.; second, Pennsylvania national guards; third, national guards from New York, Ohio and other states, the Ohio troops being headed by Governor Foraker; fourth, Grand Army and Sons of Veterans; fifth, political and civil organizations. All through the procession the military band made the air musical, and the packed sidewalks, housetops, temporary stands, balconies, and windows sent up a lusty welcome of cheers that was continuous from beginning to end of the parade. It was a surging mass of humanity for a fact, that lined the avenue, and a most splendid scene of rank upon rank of men marching to the music of innumerable bands that was looked upon and cheered. The estimate of 40,000 men in line previously made was not a bit too large, and there are those who declare there were 50,000. It was a continuous ovation to the new president, and at least a quarter of a million of people took part in it.

The carriage containing the president and his predecessor left the line at Fifteenth street and drove rapidly to the White House where the last official courtesy of the late chief magistrate, in the form of a substantial lunch, was awaiting the new occupants of the White house, and the party sat down to it and refreshed themselves from the fatigues of the day. Mrs. Cleveland was not present, and as soon as the lunch had been disposed of the ex-president made his adieus and drove away from the scene of his four years' labors and honors.

President Harrison, accompanied by his son Russell, then proceeded to the stand in front of the White House to review the procession. His appearance was welcomed by the marching thousands with cheers as was that of Mrs. Harrison and others of the party when they took their places in the stand later. The president stood for four hours reviewing the procession. As each color bearer passed he saluted "Old Glory" by taking off his hat.

Gen. Alger, numerous government officials, representatives of foreign governments, and many other distinguished persons had seats on the stand.

Ex-President Cleveland was driven by Secretary Fairchild to the latter's residence, where he with Mrs. Cleveland and Mrs. Folsom remained last night. They, accompanied by Col. and Mrs. Lamont, left for New York to-day.

THE CLIMAX OF THE EVENT.

Fair Women and Brave Men Amid a Scene of Oriental Beauty.

The inaugural ball was most successful and brilliant in every way. The magnificent hall, which is the court of the pension building and has an acre of floor, was decorated with Oriental splendor, and when it was filled (as it was to a degree that was almost prohibitive of motion) with the thousands of men and elegantly costumed and beautiful women who attended the scene was one of startling brilliance. At midnight there were 12,000 people on the floor, and at 1 o'clock in the morning 6,000 suppers had been served. The president and Mrs. Harrison; Vice President and Mrs. Morton, and a distinguished party of other ladies and gentlemen arrived on the floor at 10:30 and were received with great enthusiasm. The president made the round of the hall, bowing and shaking hands, and then ascended to the gallery, where he remained some time looking down upon the wonderful scene of life and color below him and holding an informal reception. At 11:45 he was driven to the White House to spend his first night in his new home.

The ball was too much crowded for dancing until 1 a. m., and it was 3 o'clock before Sousa, the leader of the Marine band, swung his baton for "Home, Sweet Home."

HARRISON'S COUNCIL OF ADVISERS.

A List of the Chosen Men with Sketches of Their Careers.

WASHINGTON CITY, March 5.—The new cabinet, much to the disappointment of everybody who was watching for it, was not announced yesterday, but it is undoubtedly completed and its composition, as obtained from the most reliable sources, is as follows:

Secretary of State—James G. Blaine, of Maine.

Secretary of the Treasury—William Windom, of Minnesota.

Secretary of War—Redfield Proctor, of Vermont.

Secretary of the Navy—Benjamin F. Tracy, of New York.

Secretary of the Interior—John W. Noble, of Missouri.

Postmaster General—John Wanamaker, of Pennsylvania.

Attorney General—W. H. H. Miller, of Indiana.

Secretary of Agriculture—Jeremiah Rusk, of Wisconsin.

JAMES G. BLAINE.

James Gillespie Blaine was born in West Brownsville, Washington county, Pa., Jan. 31, 1830. He had the advantage of excellent teachers, at his own home, and for a part of the year 1841 he was at school in Lancaster, O., and at the age of 13 he entered Washington college, in his native county, where he was graduated in 1847. Some time after graduation he became a teacher in the Western Military institute at Blue Licks springs, Ky. He soon returned to Pennsylvania, where, after some study of the law, he became a teacher in the Pennsylvania Institute for the Blind at Philadelphia. In 1854 he removed to Augusta, Me., where he has since made his home. In 1856 he was a delegate to the Republican national convention. In 1858 he was elected to the legislature, remaining a member for four years, serving the last two as speaker. In 1862 he was elected to congress, where he served for eighteen years. He was a candidate for the presidential nomination in 1876 and 1880. He was secretary of state under President Garfield, and served in the United States senate from 1876 to 1881.

WILLIAM WINDOM.

William Windom was born in Belmont county, Ohio, nearly sixty-two years ago, and gained some prominence there before moving to Minnesota in 1853. He served in the house as a representative during the Thirty-sixth congress, and successively in the Thirty-seventh, Thirty-eighth, Thirty-ninth and Fortieth, and was appointed to fill an unexpired term in the senate, and subsequently elected to a full term. When Garfield became president he was made secretary of the treasury. He had but a short term of this office, but in that time is regarded as having demonstrated his capacity as a financier. Since then he has been practicing law in New York and has not been much in Minnesota. He dropped out of Minnesota politics altogether. He is a close friend of Gen. Harrison.

EX-GOV. PROCTOR.

Redfield Proctor, ex-governor of Vermont, is a man of great political and business ability. He is probably the greatest manufacturer and dealer in marble in the United States, and is a power in Rutland, Vt., which has grown from a population of 5,000 to 20,000 by reason of his business operations in that vicinity. He has a strong political following as is shown by his solidification of the Vermont delegation to Chicago last summer, the delegation voting solidly for Harrison on every ballot. In fact, he was the original Harrison man in the convention, and though his delegation was all at sea for a day or two before the convention met he brought them all to his view and held them there. His strength in Vermont politics the senators, even, do not rival. As a business man his reputation is high for fair dealing as well as capacity.

BENJAMIN F. TRACY.

Gen. Benjamin F. Tracy is about 57 years old. He was born in Oswego, N. Y., and secured his education in the common schools of his native town. In 1851 he was admitted to the bar of the supreme court and opened an office in Oswego. He was twice elected district attorney of Tioga (a Democratic stronghold), the first time in 1859 and in 1861 to the general assembly. In 1862 he recruited two regiments and was made colonel of one of them, the 109th New York, and in command thereof was engaged under Grant in the battles of the Wilderness. His work broke him down and he had to turn over his command to his junior officer, and later was the colonel of the 127th United States colored troops in charge of the military post at Elmira with its 10,000 rebel prisoners. After the war he settled in New York city and practiced law, and since then has been United States district attorney and nominee for justice of the supreme court and for district attorney, being defeated each time. During the Beecher-Tilton trial he was one of the leading counsel for Mr. Beecher. Gen. Tracy is said to be one of the greatest lawyers in New York state.

JOHN W. NOBLE.

John Willock Noble was born in Lancaster, O., Oct. 26, 1831. He was the eighth of nine children. He passed his early days in Columbus and Cincinnati, O. He attended Miami university and afterward Yale college, being graduated from that institution in 1851. Upon his graduation he studied law. Mr. Noble settled first in St. Louis in 1855. Not meeting with the success in the practice of law that he expected he removed the following year to Keokuk, Ia., where he became prominent at the bar. At the breaking out of the war he enlisted as a private in the Third Iowa cavalry. This regiment was actively engaged from the beginning to the closing of the war and distinguished itself in many battles. Mr. Noble steadily arose in it until he became colonel. He was in the battle of Pea Ridge, was present at the surrender of Vicksburg, and took part in the cavalry raid into Alabama and Georgia. At the close of the war he was promoted to brigadier generalship for meritorious services. He was mustered out in 1865. After the war Gen. Noble settled in St. Louis where, on the recommendation of Attorney General Stanberry, he was made United States district attorney by President Johnson. He resigned his position in 1870 and has since been engaged in the private practice of law.

JOHN WANAMAKER.

John Wanamaker was born in Philadelphia in 1838. He was educated in the common schools, and early engaged in business. In 1861 he established a clothing house, to which he afterward added other branches of business, and he now has one of the largest stores in the United States. In 1867 Mr. Wanamaker adopted the system of co-operation in his store, and during the first year of its operation over $100,000 was paid to employes in excess of salaries. He has also organized a savings bank for employes, a building association, classes for instruction and a library. In 1858 he became a Sunday school in southwest Philadelphia, out of which has grown Bethany Presbyterian church, and he was one of the founders of the Christian commission and president of the Young Men's Christian Association of Philadelphia in 1870-83. Mr. Wanamaker was chairman of the bureau of revenue, and of the press committee, which rendered efficient service in aid of the centennial exposition in Philadelphia in 1876.

W. H. H. MILLER.

William Henry Harrison Miller was born in Augusta, Oneida county, N. Y., in 1841, and got his Christian name because his father was a great admirer of Gen. Harrison's grandfather. He was graduated from Hamilton college when 20 years of age, and taught school for two years thereafter, studying law at the same time. He finished the study of law under Judge Waite, of Toledo, O. (who was later chief justice United States supreme court), and then returned to Oneida county, where he married Miss Gertrude A. Bonce, removing almost immediately to Fort Wayne, Ind., where he remained eight years practicing his profession, in which he rose rapidly, soon standing at the head of the bar at Fort Wayne. Here he met Gen. Harrison, and was offered a partnership with him at Indianapolis and accepted the same, removing to the latter city and becoming very intimate with the general and his family—the most intimate friend Gen. Harrison ever had, in fact. The two men exactly supplied what was lacking in each other in the practice of the law, Harrison being strong as a speaker and Miller as an inquirer, and the firm's business was nearly all of the highest class of litigation, their cases always being such as paid big fees and required the greatest legal acumen. The two men admire each other equally, and Harrison has come to regard Miller as absolutely necessary to him, in or out of office.

JERE RUSK.

Jeremiah Rusk was born in Morgan county, Ohio, June 17, 1830, and removed to Wisconsin and settled in Vernon, formerly Bad Axe, in 1853. He held several county offices, was member of the assembly in 1862, was commissioned major of the Twenty-fifth Wisconsin volunteer infantry in July, 1862, and was afterward promoted to the colonelcy. He served with Gen. Sherman from the siege of Vicksburg until he was mustered out at the close of the war. He was brevetted brigadier general for bravery at the battle of Salkahatchie. In 1866 he was elected for a term of two years as comptroller of Wisconsin, and was re-elected in 1868. He was a representative to the Forty-second, Forty-third, and Forty-fourth congresses. He was appointed minister to Paraguay and Uruguay by President Garfield, but declined. He was also tendered by President Garfield the position of chief of the bureau of engraving and printing and the mission to Denmark, both of which he declined. He was elected governor in 1881, and was re-elected in 1883, and was again elected in 1886 as a compliment for his admirable maintenance of law and order during the period of May, 1885. He served longer as governor than any of his predecessors—seven years.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

Offered by Members of the Eastern Star, In Memory of Mrs. Alfred James.

Our Heavenly Father has suddenly called our Chief Officer, our beloved sister and friend, Mrs. Alfred James, into the Celestial City and has left us mourning our sore bereavement.

We have often heard the voice of prayer admonishing us that when from our golden chain the link should one by one fall away in death, we should strive so to live that the parting might be temporary; and the meeting in the land where death comes not, might be eternal. We remember how quietly she went forward in trusting faith and with the hope of immortal life, performing every duty. We remember too her tender and unselfish affection for her friends and her readiness to throw over all the broad mantle of charity. Therefore

Resolved, That in her death, our Chapter has lost a wise counsellor, a generous and faithful associate, an earnest and devoted member.

Resolved, That while we sorrowfully mourn our loss and bow submissive to the will of Him who doeth all things well, yet we rejoice for her consistent life gives us the comforting assurance that the righteous are blessed when they die.

Resolved, That we desire to have a copy of these resolutions given to the bereaved family, and also that one shall be spread upon the records of our Chapter.

Respectfully presented by your committee.

Mrs. J. F. HICKS.
Mrs. E. B. WOOD.
Mrs. C. A. WRIGHT

The club and its visitors filled the residence of Thos. Langton, on the evening of Feb. 27th.

After an interesting program, attention was turned to the contents of boxes furnished by the ladies. The lateness of the hour of dispersing proved, that according to the ideas of ladies it takes no small amount of good things to constitute a supper for two.

From the Sycamore Republican of March 2d, we clip this notice which will be of interest to the many old friends of Henry Tindall in Tecumseh. The HERALD offers its sincerest congratulations to the happy pair:

The residence of Mr. William Tifft, on Thursday, was the scene of a pleasant gathering of near friends and relatives assembled to witness the marriage of his daughter, Miss Lettie S. Tifft to J. Henry Tindall, of Lawrence, Kan. Rev. H. T. Clendening pronounced the beautiful and impressive ceremony that made the happy couple one, and everything went as merry as the proverbial marriage bell. The newly wedded couple left the same evening for Oak Park and on the following day started for their home in Lawrence, Kan. Mr. Tindall is a cousin of C. A. Tindall, and was a resident of Sycamore about twelve years ago. The bride has resided since childhood in this city and a large circle of friends will rejoice in her happiness and prosperity.

The pathway of the new settlers in Kansas is not entirely strewn with flowers. A private letter which we received a few days ago contained this passage: "Times are just terrible here. We have been here three years and have not sold $200 worth of anything in all that time." People who leave a good home in Lenawee county to start a new farm in Kansas make a blunder.

—Young men and women stop and think. You have talents for something better than your vocation. A Finely Illustrated Announcement containing full particulars of schools sent free.

A crowd of large dimensions saw the Tecumseh juvenile dramatic club present "Ten Nights in a Bar-room" Tuesday night at the opera house. The members of the club clearly have an ability for the stage, and their rendition of the drama was a complete surprise to their audience. The parts were all well taken, especially so the leading ones—that of Joe Morgan by Theo. Wood, Sample Switchel by Claude Hubbard, and Harvey Green by Wm. Gaston, Jr. Little Mary Morgan by Maud Emmett was as good as ever seen in Tecumseh by a professional, and her singing was received with encores. Talking of singing reminds us that the Aurora quartette was present and rendered some comic and pathetic airs which were applauded to the echo. The receipts amounted to about $82. The boys think of repeating the play.

Miss Celia Macham, of Deerfield is visiting Tecumseh friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Norris and daughter, of Marshal, are visiting at G. D. Perry's.

See L. D. Dewey's timothy and clover seed before buying It is the best and cheapest in town.

Mr. Jas. F. Miller and his sister Alice started last Thursday for Washington where they expect to visit a few weeks with their brother, Dr. Miller of that place.

John W. Griswold, of London, Monroe Co., arrived in town to day and will remain until next Wednesday with Tecumseh friends. He has a fine farm in London and is evidently prospering.

A series of Gospel Meetings will be held at the Opera House of this place, commencing on Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, March 10th. The meeting will be conducted by Rev. S. C. Rees and his wife, both ministers and evangelists of the Friends church, and will commence each evening at 7 o'clock. The co operation of all evangelical christians is solicited, and everybody is invited to attend the meetings.

Died in Raisin, Sunday, Feb 24th, after and illness of scarcely five days, Bertha, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Johnson, aged 12 years. She was of a quiet and lovable disposition, and will be tenderly mourned, especially by her school friends, with whom she met only the Tuesday preceding her death:

"An angel form
Walks o'er the earth with silent tread;
He bears our best loved things away;
And then we call them "dead."

He leaves our hearts all desolate,
He plucks our sweetest flowers;
Transplanted far above, they bow
Adorn immortal bowers."

THE VILLAGE ELECTION.

The annual election for corporation officers took place last Monday. There were three tickets in the field and the result was a decidedly lively contest The labor ticket displayed a strength that surprised even its own adherents. The race was pretty even between that and the regular corporation ticket. Below is the vote in detail, giving the names of each candidate with the votes received by each. "C" indicates the corporation ticket; "L," the Labor, and "P" the Prohibition. Joe Smith had clear sailing as his name was placed on two tickets.

CALIFORNIA LETTER.

EDITOR HERALD:—In this letter I will summarise some of the beauties and advantages of this country. This is a land where homes can be made such as cannot be obtained in any other portion of the United States. Surrounded by lovely vegetation the year round, where the choicest flowers bloom all winter in the open air, with bright sunshine nearly every day in the year, where lightning rods and cyclone cave are never wanted, where the festive mosquito is early heard, where the breeze is never at rest but at night, where during the winter the temperature rarely gets as low as 50°, and in the Summer above 80°, of cool nights for rest and sleep, requiring a good supply of covering, where children go bare footed all winter, where you never see mud but for a few days at a time during the rainy season. In the rainy season there is less rainy days and more days of sunshine than in any other portion of the United States. There has never been a case of yellow fever or cholera known here, and no epidemic diseases. It is true, we have sickness here and require doctors and drug stores, but the various diseases are of a much milder type than in the east, and there but few fatal cases; a large portion of the deaths of adults are of those coming here from the east with impaired health and constitution.

People coming here and spending one year and experiencing the pleasures and beauties of our climate and productions of fruits and vegetables, become convinced of the superiority of our country over any other portion of the U. S. Not only as a summer, but also as a winter residence, they fall in love with the country and want to remain and make a home here, and also want their friends to come and enjoy it.

The U. S. Record at the San Diego Signal Station, shows that in ten years there was but 120 days on which the mercury passed 80°, of these 120 were but 41 on which it passed 85°, but 22 on which it passed 90°, but 4 over 95°, and only one over 100°. During all this time there was not a day on which the mercury did not fall to at least 70° during the night, and there was but six days on which it did not fall even lower. During the same 10 years there were but six days on which the mercury fell below 35°. This low temperature was only in extreme dry weather in winter, and lasted but a few minutes, happening just before sunrise. The lowest mid day temperature was 52°, occurring but four times in the 10 years; from 65 to 70° is the average throughout the greater part of the year.

I cannot give a satisfactory discription of San Diego county, its available lands, its products, its water supply, its capabilities and future prospects in a cursory manner, and will therefore divide it and give it in the form of answers to questions that are asked about the country as follows:

1—What are the general characteristics of the country, and the nature and extent of the tillable land.
2—What is the climate.
3—What can I do after I get there.
4—Is there a chance for a poor man.
5—What can I raise that will pay.
6—Can the various grains be grown profitably.
7—Is the growing of fruit profitable.
8—Can anything be grown without irrigation.
9—What is the price of land and is it worth what is asked for it.

In treating of this subject I shall give my own observations, and what I have learned from old residents. I shall also quote from the history of San Diego county, written by T. S. Van Dyke, who has more thoroughly explored the country than any other man, with a view of giving a true and impartial discription of the country. He has written in the interests of no land company or corporation and is therefore considered reliable

1st. What are the general characteristics of the country, the nature and extent of the tilable land?

San Diego county differs in two very important respects from the other counties of Southern California. In Los Angeles and San Bernardino counties arable lands lie very nearly in a body threaded by the principle water courses, traversed by railroads and closely surrounding the larger settlements. The most careless tourists can easily see from the car window more than half of the best land, and in two or three days drive, from his hotel can see the greater part of the rest of it. In these counties, too, the arable lands lie at a comparatively uniform elevation above sea level, the slopes toward the mountains being very gentle, with few high ranges of intermediate hill to cut off the view. From many a low-hill top one can see at a glance three-fourths of all the plow land in either county. Going into the mountains one leaves behind at 1800 or 2000 feet above the sea level, about all the arable land, and most of it lies below 1500 feet.

For rapid and concentrated settlement this formation of a county is best. But for permanent and varied resources, for variety of climate, picturesque homes and perfection of all products, that of San Diego is best.

The arable lands of San Diego county considerably exceed in quantity those of San Bernardino county, and almost equal those of Los Angeles county. But they are scattered over all elevations, and lie at various distances from the coast in tracts of from a few hundred to forty acres, and ranging from sea level to 6000 feet above it. These tracts are generally separated by ranges of hills that hide each one from the view of the next. But these dividing hills, rough though they may look from a distance, are anything but barren. Hundreds of acres of fine land lie far up their slopes and over them, the vine and the olive are creeping higher year after year.

The lazy or careless observer is very easily led to misunderstand the real situation of the lands. Standing on the sea coast and looking back, one sees but a comparatively narrow strip of available land; in appearance it is hills and mountains, with seemingly no openings, and one is naturally led to think that there can be but little tillable land, but starting out to explore the country he will find innumerable openings among the mountains which lead into beautiful valleys varying in extent from a few acres to thousands of acres in extent, with fine mesa lands and gradually rising hills, many of which are susceptible of growing the olive, apple, peach and grape in perfection. Traveling on through the valley which seems to be surrounded with mountains with no outlet, on rounding a hill one sees a narrow gorge in the hills, with steep rocky banks, with no appearance of anything else, yet after traversing this gulch or canyon for a while, and turn a round a high hill, one is ushered into another valley situated and surrounded as the first, and thus one can continue on and on, and continually meet with surprises. Or let one climb the hills, which from below present no appearance of level lands, they will find thousands of acres of the finest of lands, with soil unsurpassed by the valleys. These high table lands vary in extent, and like the valley lands appear surrounded with hills, yet with openings communicating with other table lands. And thus it is all through the mountains, these table lands rising higher and higher until an elevation of 6000 and over feet is attained; even at this height the table lands are susceptible of producing fine crops of grains, vegetables and many varieties of fruit, and of the finest quality. On these higher elevations little or no irrigation is required, owing to the fact that the higher the elevation the greater is the rain fall and the more tender varieties of fruits and vegetables cannot be grown to advantage.

There are thousands of acres of government land yet to be had where pleasant homes can be made. Of course these lands are remote from markets and not easy of access at present, but as a general thing easy grades can be found for making waggon roads and it will be but a few years before several railroads will penetrate the mountains, wagon roads and markets made, and the hardy pioneer that enters these lands and endures the privations of pioneer life for a few years will find himself in possession of a beautiful home and in a climate that can be equalled in no other portion of the country. The soils of the arable lands of the country though varied may be classed under two heads, adobe and granite. The adobe is principally clay and is found in four colors, dark, light grey, ish brown, red and dark-brown; they are all alike in character. They are all strong soils and will stand heavy cropping for a long time without fertalizing, but they are hard to work except in the right condition, if worked when in the right condition they are easily worked and will retain moisture for a long time if properly cultivated. If there is sufficient moisture they will produce the heaviest crops of grains and some of the vegetables, but they are not as desirable as the granite soils, except for pears, for which it is not surpassed.

The adobe abounds principally in the lower valleys, and sometime on the lower mesa lands. The bed rock of most of the interior hills is composed of the soft red and grey granite, the disintegration of which constitute the granite soils; the red granite soils is the best for all kinds of fruits, tho' the others are but little behind it. These soils run through all the shades from nearly white sand to a dark red color, and the eye cannot be depended upon to determine the quality of the soil, for one unaccustomed to these soils, these white sands that appear devoid of all requisites of fertility, when treated to water and planted with seeds, and under a California sun, will produce crops that will astonish any one but a California farmer. None of these soils have needed any fertilization as yet, but undoubtedly proper fertilizing will be beneficial as cultivation advances.

TEMPTATION.

You might as well say to the bee,
As he lights on the lip of a flower:
"Its beauty you're welcome to see,
But the honey must stay and get sour."

Do you thinkin would list to you long,
With the treasure just under his eyes?
No. He'd find the temptation too strong,
And make a bold dash for the prize.

Or, supposing a bird on a tree,
Where cherries were rosy and sweet,
And you told him to let them all be,
For you thought them too pretty to eat,

Do you think your command he'd obey,
And with feasting his eyes be content?
No. "To let such fruit spoil," he would say,
"Was never Dame Nature's intent."

So do not be cruel and cold,
And ask me to promise in vain;
For when pretty lips open to scold
They but tempt one to kiss them again.

—George Crouch in Lippincott.

PELEG'S REBUKE.

"Grandpop," said little Peleg, "de you remember a story you told me back about New Year's time? A real good one it was, grandpop," said Peleg, diplomatically.

"'Bout New Year's time, did ye say, sonny?" replied the Old Settler, pleasantly. Lemme see—were it nat'ral his't'ry?"

"Well, there was an elk in it," said Peleg.

"Aha! an elk, hay?" exclaimed the Old Settler, nodding approvingly. "Were I a-lammin' of him good? Did I russel him an' thump him till he bellered an' bawled? Or were he a-jabbin' of me inter the ground hisself, a foot or two at ev'ry jab? An elk, Peleg, ain't ez gentle ez a suckin' dove when he pitches inter ye. W'ich were on top, sonny, an' likeliest to be cock o' the walk? Me or the elk?"

"You was, grandpop, for you was riding him," replied Peleg.

"Oh! Jist takin' a leetle elk-back spin 'round the kentry, hay?" said the Old Settler. "That were jist like me, b'gosh!"

"No!" replied Peleg. "The elk was swimming. Don't you remember? You was telling me about a time when you and your mammy and your pop was nearly starved to death. There wasn't nothing in the house to eat, and at last you went out to ketch some eels. You got ketched in a flood, and the elk came along in the flood, and you jumped on its back and steered it right into your pop's cabin, and at the same time the flood washed down from way up the creek a tree full of apples right to the cabin door, and you and your pop and your mammy lived high on elk meat and apple pie. That's what the story was about, grandpop. Do you remember it now?"

"Ruther!" said the Old Settler.

"Before you brung in the elk an' the apples you didn't have nothing in the cabin to eat at all, did you, grandpop?"

"Not even a white bean, b'gosh!"

"Not as much as a little flour or corn meal or buckwheat?"

"Ye k'd ha' stuck ev'ry drop o' flour, corn meal an' buckwhit th' was in the cabin inter a 'skeeter's eye, an' it wouldn't ha' started a tear."

"But after you fetched in the elk and apples you had apple pie, didn't you?"

"Bet ye! An' bang up apple pie it were, too. No woman ez ever lived I k'd beat my ol' mammy makin' apple pie, Peleg."

"Well, I've been wondering a good while, grandpop."

"How ye, sonny? An' w'at hez been the heft o' yer wonderin'?"

"I've been wondering, grandpop, what your mammy could have made her pie crust out of," said Peleg, not without fidgeting on his chair.

The Old Settler's smile gradually left his face. He stroked his chin awhile, and then lit his pipe. After a few emphatic whiffs he looked at Peleg.

"Peleg," said he, severely, "Bill Simmons hez ben helpin' ye 'long a consid'able with yer wonderin', or else human natur' is differ'nt f'm w'at I think it is!"

"No, grandpop!" exclaimed Peleg. "I thunk it up all by myself!"

The Old Settler smoked in silence for so long a time that Peleg could scarcely bear the suspense. At last his grandfather spoke.

"I b'lieve, Peleg," said the Old Settler, "th't ye hain't never hed a tame crow. Yer hed the measles, an' yer worked up a consid'able o' stone bruises on yer heel. Yer gran'mammy has made ye set pooty reg'lar an' listen to Brother Van Slogum of a Sunday, an' 'casionaly of an evenin' yev hed to git the best o' the multiplication table, and yev hed the mumps on both sides to wunst. But ye never hed a tame crow.

"A boy, Peleg, who has had a tame crow to contend agin', an' hez contended agin' it an' yit growd up to a man an' a gran'father, is a boy, b'gosh, setch ez don't happen often. W'en I were a boy in the Sugar Swamp deestric' I hed two tame crows an' contended agin' 'em. Wuther I ever growd up to be a man an' a gran'father, it hain't fer me to say. W'en I were a boy, one day ez I were roamin' in the woods, I see a crow's nest in th' top of a tall dead pine tree. Now I couldn't see wuther th' were anything in the nest or not, an fer all I know'd it mowt ha' been a las' year's crow's nest, an' most ev'rybody knows th't a las' year's crow's nest hain't a much more valu'ble piece o' property than an empty jug ten miles f'm a tavern. But I wa'n't chopped outen the kind o' stuff th't were gointer let me slide by that tree 'thout findin' out wuther the nest were a las' year's or a this year's, an' so I jist clumb clean to the top o' the pine to see. Wull, the nest were a this year's, an' it had in it two young crows, 'most ready to fly out an' be teached th't the unly harm in scarecrows is th't they're ll'ble to break down if too many crows lights on 'em to wunst, an' th't the unly thing th' is in life fer a crow is cussedness, an' th't he must alluz hev that cussedness unmixed. I made up my mind right off th't I'd jist save these two young crows f'm a disgraceful futur', and so I lifted 'em outen the nest, slid down the tree an' lugged the youngsters hum.

"Ye mebbe don't know th't if ye slit a crow's tongue w'en the varmint is young it'll larn to talk ez glib ez a lightnin' rod peddler; but wuther ye know it or not, it's so. So w'en these two got a leetle older I clipped their wings an' slit their tongues. Twa'n't long fore them crows k'd talk a streak, an' in six months—Jeewhiz! but they was corkers! They got to handlin' stage driver and bark peeler talk ruther easy, too, an' w'ile that made their conversation a leetle sparklin' for ord'nary ev'ry day business 'bout Sugar Swamp, it were a leetle on the nutmeg grater order w'en the dominie were to our house to dinner on Sunday. One Sunday, I ment'ner, my mammy took Ebenezer an' Hanner—that was the names I give the crows—an' put 'em outen the house they was so onpolite, but that made 'em mad, an' they flew fust to one winder an' then to another, an' hollered in at the dominie setch warm advice th't if he'd ha' followed it he'd a gone on the double quick to a place he'd ben a warnin' the most o' Sugar Swamp deestric', away from fer nigh onter twenty years.

"One evenin' me an' my mammy was settin' in the kitchen, peelin' apples. Ebenezer an' Hanner was discussin' together over in one corner. I were goin' on to 16 then, an' were thinkin' a good deal of a gal named Polly Tubbs. My mammy didn't like Polly, an' I'd ruther ha' took the wust kind of a lickin' th'n th't she sh'd hear th't I had a notion fer the gal. Bimeby Hanner she hopped up on the back of a cheer, an' cockin' her head to one side she says to me:

"'Whar were you an' Polly Tubbs a sneakin' to las' night?'

"'An' yer pockets full of mother's doughnuts, too!' hollers Ebenezer f'm the floor.

"'He's a sly un!' says Hanner.

"'An' his eyeteeth hain't hardly cut yit, nuther!' hollers Ebenezer.

"Wull, the truth o' the matter were, I had told my mammy I were goin' to meetin' the night afore, but 'stid o' that me an' Polly had gone to an apple cut at ol' Jake Slipe's; an' I had took a lot o' mammy's doughnuts she'd ben bakin' for the dominie's donation. Wa'n't I took back mos' nuthin' at them tame crows a-chattin' out the hull business? Jeewhiz! but I felt cheap!

"'Polly Tubbs, is it?' says my mammy, whack in my ear. 'You just Polly Tubbs off to bed, an' let me ever hear of you an' that scaltr' agin; that's all.'

"'Good night, Sis,' hollered Hanner, as I left the room.

"'Sleep tight!' yells Ebenezer.

"An' w'at does them crows do the next day but go over to Polly's an' tell her th't I got my ears boxed an' sent to bed fer goin' to the apple cut with her; an' Polly straight gives me the nutten dead for Bill Simmons!

"An' ev'ry day, an' ev'ry night fer that critter, the crows th't I had interduced to 'spectable society an' made stumpin' up kept a playin' rigs on me an' a knock'n all tav plans in the bud. But I counteracted with 'em, an' growd; an' w'en one night durin' pertracted meetin' Hanner an' Ebenezer sneaked in unbeknown to anybody, an' w'ile Deacon Skinner were exhortin', ez solemn ez solemn k'd be an' tears in his eyes, jumped up on a seat an' sung 'He's a jolly good feller' at the top o' their lungs, an' Brother Wacker carried 'em out an' wrung both o' their necks. I jist said to myself that arter livin' through them same crows I guessed I k'd cheer up agin most anything. But, Peleg, I didn't think I were gointer live to hev a gran'son who'd lay awake o' nights a wonderin' an' a thinkin' up things all by hisself, ev'ry one on 'em a sinivation agin his poor ol' gran'pop. I didn't think that, an' I'll go to bed now a-thinkin', b'gosh, how wusser th'n two tame crows it is to hev a siniwatin' child!"—Ed Mott in New York Sun.

Killing Canada Thistles.

Joseph Harris says: The old fashioned summer fallow was an excellent method of killing thistles, but we have outgrown it. Our farmers prefer to use phosphates and grow a crop of oats or barley or other spring sown crops instead of letting the land lie fallow. In this way they are probably right, but this constant cropping creates a necessity for better cultivation. We plant corn or potatoes and give them sufficient cultivation between the rows to hold the thistles in check. The shade from the corn also dwarfs the thistles, but does not kill the roots. The next spring, the land is plowed and sown to oats or barley, and as soon as the crop is harvested the land is again plowed and sown, the first of September, to winter wheat. Grass seed is sown with the wheat in the fall, and with clover seed on the surface the following spring. The clover is mown for hay and afterwards for seed, and the next year is sometimes plowed up again or is allowed to remain another year either for pasture or for timothy hay. Probably no better rotation of crops can be adopted in the winter wheat growing sections. But great care must be exercised to kill thistles and other weeds, or the thistles, especially, will overrun our farms. Fall plowing after the corn or potatoes or beans are removed and thorough and repeated plowing after the oats and barley are harvested are the true methods of killing thistles.

A Good Theology.

Ought our religion to repel or attract? My little child, 4 years old, said to her mother: "Mamma, I saw in a book a picture of a man and a picture of God, and the man looked awfully frightened because he saw God. 'Now,' she says, 'if I had been there and God had come in, I would not have been frightened; I would have just gone right up and put my arms around his neck and kissed him.' Well, I thought that was pretty good theology. In other words religion ought to invite our caresses instead of driving the world howling away, as though it were something disagreeable, repulsive, and to be hated.—Rev. T. De Witt Talmage in New York Observer.

A NEW BOOK.

Mr. Lewis McLouth of Adrian, will be in Tecumseh, Friday and Saturday of this week, to canvass for the new work, "Forging his Chains." It is a book of thrilling interest and is finding an extensive sale wherever it has been been introduced. We commend Mr. McLouth to the favorable consideration of our citizens. The following testimonial will show what good judges think of the work.

ADRIAN, Mich., Nov. 29, '88.

FRIEND LEWIS, F. MCLOUTH:—You have asked me to express my opinion of Geo. Bidwell's narrative, a book entitled "Forging His Chains." I have read the same with interest and believe that any person so doing will not only be interested but instructed, especially regarding crime and penal servitude in England. The work is a stern verification of the old adage that "murder will out," and the terrible punishment meted out to Bidwell and his associates, exemplifies the fact that crime and evil doers live in an atmosphere of apprehensive doubt and are of all men the most miserable. In this it points a moral. Truly Yours.

HOW CAN PARENTS

St. Nicholas for 1889.

PEOPLE who have the idea that St. Nicholas Magazine is only for little children should look over the prospectus of that magazine for 1889, and they will discover that it is for children of all ages, "from five to eighty-five," as some one recently said of it. Indeed, while St. Nicholas is designed for girls and boys, it might almost be called a "family magazine," for the grown-up members of a household will find much to interest them in every number.

The editor, Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, calls the next volume an "all-round-the-world year," because it is to contain so many illustrated papers about the world in general—not dry geographical papers, but stories and sketches and tales of travel and adventure by land and sea—and all illustrated by the best artists. The features will include a serial story, "How We Made the Farthest North," by Gen. A. W. Greely, the well-known commander of the Greely Expedition; a serial about Canada, by Mrs. Catherwood, who is writing a serial story for The Century this year; "Indians of the Amazon," by Mrs. Frank R. Stockton. There are many papers about Europe, including a Christmas story of life in Norway, by H. H. Boyesen; articles on Holland and the Dutch, by Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge; "The Queen's Navy," by Lieut. F. Harrison Smith, R. N., with illustrations of many of England's finest war ships; "The Winchester School," illustrated by Joseph Pennell; "English Railway Trains," by Wm. H. Rideing, etc., etc. The French papers include "Ferdinand de Lesseps and his two Ship Canals," and there are several interesting contributions on German, Italian and Russian subjects.

Under "Asia," comes "Boys and Girls in China," by Yan Phou Lee (a recent graduate of Yale); "Home Life in the East," by Mrs. Holman Hunt, and a number of papers about Japan. Under "Africa" there is a sketch of Henry M. Stanley, by Noah Brooks, and several stories about Egypt. Australia is not forgotten, nor the islands of the sea, and there are even to be stories of under the sea.

Of course the bulk of the contents will relate to American subjects, as usual. Mrs. Burnett, the author of "Little Lord Fauntleroy," contributes a story of New York called "Little Saint Elizabeth," there will be papers describing how the government offices are conducted, papers about athletics, amateur photography, etc. The full prospectus will be sent to any one who wishes to see it by the publishers, The Century Co., of New York.

The Examiner recently said of St. Nicholas, that "no doubt it is only half blessed."

"I have suffered for years from a bronchial trouble that, whenever I take cold or am exposed to inclement weather, shows itself by a very annoying tickling sensation in the throat and by difficulty in breathing. I have tried a great many remedies, but none does so well as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral which always gives prompt relief in returns of my old complaint."—Ernest A. Hepler, Inspector of Public Roads, Parish Terre Bonne, La.

"I consider Ayer's Cherry Pectoral a most important remedy

For Home Use.

I have tested its curative power, in my family, many times during the past thirty years, and have never known it to fail. It will relieve the most serious affections of the throat and lungs, whether in children or adults."—Mrs. E. G. Edgerly, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

"Twenty years ago I was troubled with a disease of the lungs. Doctors afforded me no relief and considered my case hopeless. I then began to use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, before I had finished one bottle, found relief. I continued to take this medicine until a cure was effected. I believe that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved my life."—Samuel Griggs, Waukegan, Ill.

"Six years ago I contracted a severe cold which settled on my lungs and soon developed all the alarming symptoms of Consumption. I had a cough, night sweats, bleeding of the lungs, pains in chest and sides, and was so prostrated as to be confined to my bed most of the time. After trying various prescriptions, without benefit, my physician finally determined to give me Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took it, and the effect was magical. I seemed to rally from the first dose of this medicine, and, after using only three bottles, am as well and sound as ever."—Rodney Johnson, Springfield, Ill.

THE CHILDLIKE SPIRIT.

LESSON X, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, MARCH 10.

Text of the Lesson, Mark ix. 33-42—Commit to Memory Verses 36, 37—Golden Text, Mark x. 15—Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

The incidents of this lesson are found in the other Gospels in Matt. xix. 13-30; Luke xvi. 15-30. In the life of our Lord Jesus many miracles have been wrought, many journeys made and many eternal words spoken since our last lesson, and He is soon to start on His last journey to Jerusalem (Mk. x. 32-34), there to accomplish His great work of atonement; but everywhere and at all times He is the same meek and lowly Jesus whose one aim is to glorify God and direct men to the kingdom, that kingdom which is mentioned five times in our lesson today, first as to who may enter it, and then the hindrances to entering it.

13. "And they brought young children to Him, that He should touch them." Matthew says "that He should put His hands on them and pray." Israel was taught to give great heed to the children, and many were their instructions to teach them concerning the wonders which God had wrought for their fathers and the laws which He had given them (Ex. xii, 26; Deut. iv, 10; vi, 7; xi, 9; Josh. iv, 21, 22; Ps. lxxviii, 4-8), and now that the fulfillment of the law and the very wonder working God of Israel was in their midst, was it not beautiful to bring the children to Him.

"His disciples rebuked those that brought them." The generation who speak thus have not died out; they are selfish and cannot be bothered with the children; they are blind and know not the spirit of Christ, though professing to be His people. Where the spirit of Christ is there will be not only love for the children, but they will be brought to Jesus.

14. "When Jesus saw it He was much displeased." I think this is the only time that it is written that He was displeased with the disciples, though they did often grieve Him by their unbelief and hardness of heart.

15. "Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child he shall not enter therein." A little child such as these (Luke calls them infants) has nothing, needs everything, is entirely helpless and dependent and believes what it is told, and when we come in this spirit of utter helplessness, emptiness and simple faith, professing not to bring anything with us, but ready to receive the salvation which God is ready to give as a free and unmerited favor, then shall we be born again, a foretaste of the kingdom come in our hearts, and in due time we shall enter the kingdom.

16. "He took them up in His arms, put His hands upon them and blessed them." Oh, happy children and happy parents! they would never forget that day. We do not know who they were, nor anything of the after life of those children, but surely we shall meet in the kingdom the children whom Jesus took in His arms and blessed. It is not possible that this unchangeable Jesus can be indifferent to the welfare of any one of the multitudes of infants which are constantly passing out from this earth. Let every mother who has lost a babe find comfort here, and also read carefully Deut. i, 39. If the streets of the restored Jerusalem in Palestine are yet to be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof (Zech. viii, 5), what must be the present joy of the hosts of children in the presence of the King while they wait for the greater joys of the New Jerusalem. But above all things, let us lay to heart and impress upon the scholars from this portion of our lesson, that to enter the kingdom of God we must be born again, we must be converted and become as little children. (John iii, 3-7; Matt. xviii, 3.) We must say sincerely

Nothing in my hands I bring,
Simply to Thy cross I cling.

17. "Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life." Here is a young man, a ruler among the people, and very rich (Matt. xix, 22; Luke xviii, 18, 23); and according to this verse in our lesson, he comes running and kneels right down in the street before Jesus, and in the presence of the people, and utters these words.

18. "None good but one, that is God." As if to say, "God is the only one who is good, do you acknowledge Me as God?" "He that cometh to God must believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him" (Heb. xi, 6).

19. "Thou knowest the commandments." Matthew says: "If thou wilt enter into life keep the commandments." So also in reply to the lawyer who asked a similar question to that of this young ruler, Jesus referred him to the law, saying, "This do and thou shalt live" (Luke x). Now we know that by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in His sight, and that the law cannot give life, but can only make us out sinners and shut our mouths (Rom. iii, 19, 20; Gal. iii, 21, 22); why, then, did Jesus direct this man to the law? Surely that he might be convinced of sin and thus led to receive eternal life as a free gift from God.

20. "Master, all these have I observed from my youth." He was no sinner in his own eyes, but a righteous man, having always kept the law as he thought, and was now ready to do something more if he could thus obtain eternal life. He was ignorant of God's righteousness and going about to establish his own. (Rom. x, 1-4.)

21. "One thing thou lackest." But that one thing was everything.

22. "He was sad at that saying and went away grieved." He made his choice, and preferred present things to things unseen, his wealth rather than Christ, his ease rather than a cross. How unlike Moses, who esteemed the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt, for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward; or Paul, who suffered the loss of all things that he might win Christ.

23-25. "How hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God." The heart can only have one supreme ruler, and if that one is wealth, or pleasure, or learning, or anything in this world, then the only rightful ruler—the Lord Jesus Christ—is dethroned and a usurper has his place.

26, 27. "They were astonished out of measure." God's thoughts and ways are so different from ours that until we are willing to lay aside all our thoughts and opinions and simply believe what He says, we will often be sorely perplexed; and if any one prefers their own thoughts and ways to those of God, they will continue in darkness and not have that fellowship with the Father and the Son which is their privilege.

28-31. "An hundred fold now, * * * with persecutions, and in the world to come eternal life." We have seen the manner of entering the kingdom, and the hindrances to entering it, from these two object lessons of the children and the rich young ruler, and now, in answer to Peter's question, we have a simple simple statement concerning the present and future prospects of the follower of Christ. All true believers become blood relations of each other—redeemed by His precious blood; all are to Him as mother and sister and brother, and should be the same to each other, one household of faith, members of one family.

SONG.

O love! love! love! of every bliss the hottest,
O queenly rose! of every love the sweetest,
O rose! imprisoned on my throbbing heart,
We two shall never part—
Shall never part.

One time—one time the golden sunbeams crowned thee,
And all the roses sighed and loved around thee.
Thou wert the chosen of the silver dew,
And bees did come to woo—
Did come to woo.

What time the bees and buds and sun did love thee,
Then thou wert young, with spring around, above thee,
And rich in all that beauty could endow;
But would they love thee now?
Ah, would they now?

Now that all withered on this heart thou hast,
And tender thou are gone, and that thou dost—
Foldest gray petals o'er thy poor, dead heart,
From which all sweets depart—
All sweets depart.

O rose! rose! rose! so like this heart thou seemest!
O foolish heart! thou throbbest yet and dreamest—
Because of youth and joy time has bereft us—
And all our love has left us—
Love has left us. —Cora Fabbri.

IN JAIL AT CAMDEN.

I have nothing in particular against the town of Camden except that it lies opposite Philadelphia. The railroad depot is on the wharf, where the nicest view can be obtained of the golden hued waters of the harbor, and where the odors stirred up by paddle wheels come to the nose before any of their original freshness has been lost on the summer breezes. The waiting room was erected for the convenience of those who have to wait. Everybody has to wait in Camden. If they didn't have to wait, why have a waiting room?

I was waiting there one day last summer, and after putting in two hours at it had just commenced to study the wonderful architecture of six New Jersey apples spread out in a reckless fashion on a news stand, when I observed a man sizing me up. It was his bounden duty, as a good citizen of New Jersey, to ascertain whether I was a pirate looking to capture one of the big ferryboats, or only a humble citizen making a quiet sneak down to Atlantic City. I saw him slyly comparing my height, weight, dress, color of eyes, etc., with memoranda in a book, and I felt that I was a goner. The wicked may dodge the lasso handled by Nemesis now and then, but the loop is certain to fall sooner or later. I had eluded all the officers between Detroit and Camden, and was wearing my hat on my ear and feeling puffed up, but lo! Nemesis was here.

My first thought was to walk over to the stranger and surrender myself and go to the gallows without a complaint, but my second was to get away and hunt for fresh fields of crime and shed more blood. I had two hours to spare, and while the man seemed to be asking the price of a dime novel I slipped aboard a ferry boat. The craft had only started when I discovered the man beside me. We crossed over to Philadelphia and returned on the same boat. Once I thought of ending it all and finding rest beneath the tan bark waves of the historic river, but I hated to get wet and therefore abandoned the idea.

When the boat suddenly brought up in Camden I made a rush for a street car. I didn't know whether the car ran to a coal mine in the center of the town, or out into the country where stumps, haystacks and brush heaps would give me a show for my life, but I took it. So did the strange man. Why he did not put the handcuffs and shackles on me at once, and observe that I had run my race, I couldn't understand. Perhaps he was not sure of my identity. Perhaps he wanted to prolong my torture.

He looked out of the window on his right and seemed to be thinking of the past and gone. I looked out of the window on my left and was certainly thinking of the days and nights to come. When we had gone about a mile he suddenly rang the bell. You stop a Camden street car that way, same as in Detroit or Buffalo. When the pair of mules had come to a dead standstill the stranger brushed his coattail aside in a graceful way, showed me the big end of a big revolver and gently remarked:

"Now come along without any nonsense! You know me and I know you!"

Here was a point for dispute, but I didn't accept it just then. You can always get along better with a stranger by seeming to let him have his own way. I didn't even protest against leaving the car at his dictation. After a man has been in the army five years he is ready to take orders from any one. When we descended from the car he took me by the right arm. This was very kind in him, as I might have fallen down.

In front of us was a structure labeled "Police Station." It evidently had something to do with the Camden police. I didn't care about going in, as I had seen the interior of so many others; but the man tightened his grip and I did not disappoint him. He walked me up to the sergeant's desk, heaved a sigh of relief, and fanned himself with his hat as he softly observed:

"Well, I've got him."

"Hanged if you haven't," replied the sergeant. "Say, Bill, this is a stroke of luck."

"I guess so," guessed Bill.

"Call the captain."

The captain was playing euchre in the next room. He came out at the call, brightened up at the sight of me, and waved his hand and said:

"Good! Search him and lock him up in No. 4."

"What's the charge?" asked the sergeant as he lifted his pen.

"Obtaining money under false pretenses. We'd better telegraph Red Bank that we've got him."

The captain disappeared to see about the telegraphing, and the detective began to search me. He came across my name on cards, envelopes, collar and cuffs and pockets, and before I was half searched he began to look anxious.

"Sailing under still another name, ain't you?" he queried.

"It's the only name I ever had."

"And you claim to be this man?" he demanded, holding up one of my cards.

"I do."

"And what are you doing here in town?"

"On my way down to Atlantic city."

"And do you know any one here or in Philadelphia?"

"About twenty people, I guess."

He stood off and looked at me with an expression of mingled disgust and anxiety, but the sergeant braced him up with:

"He's giving you a stiff, Bill. Don't let him scare you!"

Bill braced up, completed the search, and I was locked up in a very roomy and well bred cell. The furniture was ancient, but combined art and convenience, and the hangings and mountings were all that could be expected of a small town. I whiled away an hour, and then four or five men came rushing in upon me. They began to abuse each other and apologized to me before they got the door open, and, when they led me out it was to the captain's room.

"Say, old fellow, can you ever forgive us?" gasped the captain as he put his arms around my neck.

"If he won't, then I might as well shoot my head off!" added the detective.

"He must forgive us—indeed, he must!" finished the sergeant.

"Gentlemen, you seem perturbed," I observed. "Has anything gone wrong in this case?"

"Oh! come off!" replied the captain. "We come right down from the limb. It was all a mistake, and we'll stand on our heads all the rest of the week if you say so. Why in blazes didn't you talk—deny it—claim a mistake?"

"And be told to shut up for my pains! How did you find out your mistake?"

"They got the right man up the road, and the hotel keeper here identified you as you came along. Say, what'll you have?"

"Twenty thousand dollars damages."

"Then the three of us will commit suicide! Say a basket of wine and five boxes of good cigars. That'll bankrupt the trio of us, but we've got to suffer."

I let 'em off at that, and they were so glad that I didn't get out of town until the next day. Folks ought to be careful how they seize strangers and walk 'em around and feel in their pockets, but strangers shouldn't be mean about it when it proves to have been a mistake made pro bono publico.—M. Quad in Detroit Free Press.

Preventives of Disease.

In a book entitled "A Bird's Eye View of France in the Middle Ages," M. Challmel tells some interesting medical superstitions formerly prevalent in that country. To ward off fevers one might refrain from eating meat or eggs at Easter and on other festivals, or carry about a piece of human bone, or pluck and eat the first daisy found in the field. If fever had been contracted the best cure was for the sufferer to rise early in the morning and go out into the fields, walking backwards all the time, pluck a handful of herbs, throw it behind him without looking at it, and then go home as fast as he could. The fever would then leave him and attack the devil instead. Running about a church with no aim in particular prevented pleurisy. Earache was cured by the touch of a skeleton hand; headache by binding the temples with the rope by which some one had been hanged; toothache by touching with a dead man's tooth—all sufficiently ghastly remedies. The most anti-hygienic notion was, perhaps, that of the Bretons, who thought they would save their children from all evils by dressing them in a damp shirt.—The Hospital.

Lights for Surgical Operations.

In Vienna Dr. Roth and Professor Reuss have devised an instrument for illuminating from the outside some of the cavities of the body, such as the larynx and nose. The instrument is a well polished glass rod, to one end of which a small electric incandescent lamp is attached. The light of the lamp is reflected equally through the whole glass rod to its other end, which is placed on the skin of the throat in the case of a laryngoscopical examination being required. Then the interior of the larynx becomes illuminated sufficiently for laryngoscopy. If this luminous glass rod is applied to the sclerotic, the interior of the eyeball can be examined in the same way as by using an ophthalmoscope. As the glass rod remains cold, it can be employed in operative surgery to light the natural and artificial cavities.—New York Telegram.

America's Fame Spreading.

Let us put two and two together: Joseph Chamberlain has an American bride. Gen. Boulanger was once charmed by a young woman whose home is in St. Louis, and rumor has it that his motive in seeking a divorce is to secure an American bride. Mr. Chamberlain said while in Scotland the other day that the common school system is the glory of the United States, and he suggested free schools for Ireland. Gen. Boulanger has within a week spoken in the highest terms of "that splendid fabric, the American constitution." He furthermore said that he first learned the true meaning of the word liberty in America. Of course any one is at liberty to draw conclusions and it seems to us that Gen. Boulanger has been brought under the influence of a fair American dictator, and that Joseph Chamberlain has taken his first lesson in home rule.—Springfield Republican.

A Child's Rebuke.

"I never saw that 'ere child in these parts afore," said an inquisitive dame to her equally curious daughter in this city, a day or two ago, "and I mean to find out who her folks be an' where she lives when she's to hum."

A minute later a nasal twang was heard on the air calling, "Sis, sis, say, sis, who be you an' where do you belong?"

A proud little figure drew herself up haughtily and a childish voice responded, "My mamma has taught me never to answer impertinent questions."

"Do tell," was the rather subdued response of the disappointed newsmonger.—Detroit Free Press.

WHAT ON EARTH

Is the reason people will not, can not, or do not see any difference in cheap nostrums put up by Cheap John houses or irresponsible parties at enormous profits, rather than take a medicine of world wide reputation and one that is giving universal satisfaction at equal price? No medicine in the world is giving such unparalleled satisfaction for purifying the blood as BEGGS' BLOOD PURIFIER & BLOOD MAKER, and every bottle that does not do its work will cost you nothing.

LONG LIFE.

There is nothing in the world more generally desired than long life, yet the majority of people put off caring for their health—not because they are really careless, but because we live our lives at such a pace we have not time to give the subject sufficient thought until we recive a reminder in the shape of a severe illness.

Then, too, we are constantly bewildered by the various schools of medicine, and the physicians who represent them, and often blunder in our choice of a doctor.

If people only knew that the very best health-keeper, life-preserver, and disease-preventer that has yet been discovered, is simered down into a concentrated and very palatable form in the shape of New Style Pleasant Taste Vinegar Bitters, they would not hesitate a moment to try it.

But they do not know. How can they know, when so many not only worthless, but positively injurious drugs are constantly flooding the market under various names and guises, that the New Style Vinegar Bitters is as bad as any of them.

They do not know, of course, unless they have courage to try the New Style. It straightens out a tangled-up system in a very short while, and those who buy it once buy it always.

Why dont you try it, reader? It is sent out by a responsible house, and is exactly as represented. It costs but one dollar for a very large bottle. Try it at once and you will never be so glad of anything in your life. Your druggists may not have it, but he will order it for you. Be sure it says New Style Pleasant Taste on carton and bottle before you take it. Try it, and you will feel happier than if you had found a gold mine—of health.

Free from alcohol and opium; composed of expensive herbs and roots, with a fine, delicate flavoring.

WEATHER WISDOM.

Feathered Foretellers of Storms.

The saw-like note of the great titmouse is said to foretell rain; that of the blue-tit, cold.

Various proverbs would seem to indicate that the cry of the owl, if heard in bad weather, foretells a change.

Herons, says an old author, flying up and down in the evening as if doubtful where to rest, "presage some evil approaching weather"—a legend as old as Virgil.

"In Germany dwellers in the country lack faith in the skylark as announcing fine weather, but when the lark and the cuckoo sing together they know summer has come.

In Hampshire swans are believed to be hatched in thunderstorms, and it is said that those on the Thames have an instinctive prescience of floods. Before heavy rains they raise their nests.

In the south of France so much store is set by the wisdom of the magpie, that if it builds its nest on the summit of a tree the country folk expect a season of calm, but if lower down, winds and tempests are sure to follow.

The abhorrence in which mariners hold the swallow-like storm petrel is well known. Its appearance is believed to denote cold weather. This little bird is the Mother Carey's chicken of sailors, and is also called storm finch and water witch.

Concerning gulls in general children who live by the sea say: "Seagull, seagull, sit on the sand; it's never good weather while you're on the land;" and fisher folk know that when the seamews fly out early and far to seaward fair weather may be expected.

When rooks fly high and seem to imitate birds of prey by soaring, swooping, and falling, it is almost a certain sign of coming storm. Staying in the vicinity of the rookery, returning at midday, or coming to roost in groups are also said to be omens to the like effect.

The constant iteration of the green woodpecker's cry before the storm has given it the names of rain bird, rain pie, and rain fowl. Stormcock is a provincial name shared by this bird and the missel thrush, the latter often singing through gales of wind and rain. Storm bird is also applied to the fieldfare.

To Scotch shepherds the drumming of the snipe indicates dry weather and frost at night, and Gilbert White remarks that woodcocks have been observed to be remarkably listless against snowy, foul weather, while, according to another author, their early arrival and continued abode "foretells a liberal harvest."—Chicago News.

LEATHER FOR BOOK BINDINGS.

The Best Dress for Our Choice though Silent Companions.

Bookbinders, as well as other workers in leather, must look to nature for the best goods. Although science has made several noble efforts to supply an imitation, and in some cases has succeeded, yet for first-class work where durability is required, the genuine skin is necessary.

Russia leather, one of the oldest modern coverings, is still the most durable, so far as wear is concerned. Although American russia (cowhide) has very largely taken the place of the genuine article—American russia being larger skins, is much better adapted to factories than the imported skin—yet for a first-class blank book in every respect the genuine russia leather is best, some excellent bookbinders to the contrary, notwithstanding.

American russia was introduced about 18 years ago, and when first put on the market it was a pale red and binders used aniline to color it a deeper red, as near the color of russia as possible; but of late years tanners are making it of a beautiful color.

The splits or buffing, as it is called, is the outside of the hide; the inside is made into patent leather for carriage tops, etc. Buffing is made in all imaginable colors and grains, and some of the best moroccos and sealskin imitations are buffing.

Roans are full substance sheepskins; skivers are split skins, the outside being used for pass books, law books and a great variety of cheap bindings; also for hat linings, jewelry cases, etc.

The inside or flesh side is used on heavy blank books for buff leather.—American Bookmaker.

A SUBSTITUTE FOR CREMATION.

Showing What Too Much Scientific Study Will Bring a Man To.

Dr. Hay, an English chemist, with a leaning toward ghastliness, has invented a substitute for cremation.

He would pound and pulverize the corpse in a mortar, breaking the bones to little bits. The resulting mass he would put through a prodigious sausage machine and make it into mincemeat. Dried by means of steam heat at a temperature of 250°, the mass would attain a commercial value as a fertilizer.

Should this method fail to suit, he suggests either the boiling of the body and the conversion of the resulting oil into a lubricant for soap, or else the placing of the body into a gas retort and converting it into illuminating gas, ammonia, tar, animal charcoal, sulphate of ammonia, aniline colors and carbolic acid.

Dr. Hay is nothing if not scientific and practical.

Sensible To Be Civil.

I have often wondered what it was that made men affable, and why there should exist so many degrees of sociability.

After pondering over this question, I have concluded that while intellect cuts a large figure in making a man affable, often the main reason may be found in self-interest.

A boor always shows that he is deficient in common sense and gains absolutely nothing by his rudeness but the dislike of his fellows. A sensible man will always be civil.—Nashville Democrat.

A Philosophical View.

"Ma," said Bobby, in a slightly injured tone of voice, "there were lots of things you let me do before the baby came that you don't let me do now."

"Do you think so, Bobby?"

"Yes," asserted Bobby. "Still," he went on with more philosophy, "I can't expect you to be so good a mother with two children as you were when you only had one."

The Reaction Came First.

"How is your employer, Sambo? I heard he had a bad fall."

"Yes, sah, but he's sufferin' most from the reaction before he fell, sah."

"Oh, the reaction came first, did it?"

"Yes, sah, de mule kicked him ober."

A GREAT MAGAZINE.

The Century for 1889.

THE question has often been asked, "to what does The Century owe its great circulation?" The Christian Union once answered this by the statement that "it has been fairly won, not by advertising schemes, but by the excellence which characterizes it in every department." In their announcements for the coming year the publishers state that it has always been their desire to make The Century the one indispensable periodical of its class, so that whatever other publication might be desirable in the family, The Century could not be neglected by those who wish to keep abreast of the times in all matters pertaining to culture. And the unprecedented circulation of the magazine would seem to be the response of the public to this intention.

With the November number The Century begins its thirty-seventh volume. Two great features of the magazine which are to continue throughout the new volume are already well known to the public, the Lincoln history and the papers on "Siberia and the Exile System." The first of these, written by Messrs. Nicolay and Hay, President Lincoln's private secretaries, contains the inside history of the dark days of the war, as seen from the White House.

THE SIBERIAN PAPERS,

by George Kennan, are attracting the attention of the civilized world. The Chicago Tribune says that "no other magazine articles printed in the English language just now touch upon a subject which so vitally interests all thoughtful people in Europe and America and Asia." As is already known, copies of The Century entering Russia have these articles torn out by the customs officials on the frontier.

DURING 1889

The Century will publish the most important art feature that has yet found place in its pages. It is the result of four years' work of Mr. Timothy Cole, the leading magazine engraver of the world, in the galleries of Europe, engraving from the originals the greatest pictures by the old masters. A series of papers on Ireland, its customs, landscapes, etc., will appear, and there are to be illustrated articles on Bible scenes, treating especially the subjects of the International Sunday-School Lessons. George W. Cable will write "Strange, True Stories of Louisiana." There will be novelettes and short stories by leading writers, occasional articles on war subjects (supplemental to the famous "War Papers" by General Grant and others, which have been appearing in The Century), etc., etc.

The Century costs four dollars a year, and it is published by The Century Co., of New York, who will send a copy of the full prospectus to any one on request.

St. Nicholas for 1889.

PEOPLE who have the idea that St. Nicholas Magazine is only for little children should look over the prospectus of that magazine for 1889, and they will discover that it is for children of all ages, "from five to eighty-five," as some one recently said of it. Indeed, while St. Nicholas is designed for girls and boys, it might almost be called a "family magazine," for the grown-up members of a household will find much to interest them in every number.

The editor, Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, calls the next volume an "all-round-the-world year," because it is to contain so many illustrated papers about the world in general—not dry geographical papers, but stories and sketches and tales of travel and adventure by land and sea—and all illustrated by the best artists. The features will include a serial story, "How We Made the Farthest North," by Gen. A. W. Greely, the well-known commander of the Greely Expedition; a serial about Canada, by Mrs. Catherwood, who is writing a serial story for The Century this year; "Indians of the Amazon," by Mrs. Frank R. Stockton. There are many papers about Europe, including a Christmas story of life in Norway, by H. H. Boyesen; articles on Holland and the Dutch, by Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge; "The Queen's Navy," by Lieut. F. Harrison Smith, R. N., with illustrations of many of England's finest war ships; "The Winchester School," illustrated by Joseph Pennell; "English Railway Trains," by Wm. H. Rideing, etc., etc. The French papers include "Ferdinand de Lesseps and his two Ship Canals," and there are several interesting contributions on German, Italian and Russian subjects.

Under "Asia," comes "Boys and Girls in China," by Yan Phou Lee (a recent graduate of Yale); "Home Life in the East," by Mrs Holman Hunt, and a number of papers about Japan. Under "Africa" there is a sketch of Henry M. Stanley, by Noah Brooks, and several stories about Egypt. Australia is not forgotten, nor the islands of the sea, and there are even to be stories of under the sea.

Of course the bulk of the contents will relate to American subjects, as usual. Mrs. Burnett, the author of "Little Lord Fauntleroy," contributes a story of New York called "Little Saint Elizabeth," there will be papers describing how the government offices are conducted, papers about athletics, amateur photography, etc. The full prospectus will be sent to any one who wishes to see by the publishers, The Century Co., of New York.

The Graphic recently said of St. Nicholas, the famous "without it is only half-blessed."

Irregularity in meals, rest and sleep will inevitably eventuate in costiveness and constipation. An admirable curative for these annoying ailments is Laxador, the famous remedy. Price 25 cents.

It is no wonder that so many mothers praise Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup. One of our best physicians pronounce it to be the only safe remedy for children.

THE BELLE OF LIMA.

Her Beauty and Fascinations, and the Care Taken of Her by a Jealous Mother.

Lima from the earliest times has been noted for its beautiful women; not merely for symmetrical features, but elegance of physique and graceful movement.

In speaking of the women of Lima reference is made to the superior class of Spanish descendants; the genealogies of Pizarro and his followers, who, as Prescott states, shod their horses with silver shoes and gambled away in one night the accumulated wealth of centuries.

A typical Lima belle is of greater stature than the North American model of beauty, possessing a well-rounded, graceful form, small and elegantly moulded feet, and pearly teeth.

The eyes are dark, large, and so bewitching in their expression as to drive care from the skipper's mind as he whirls his ideal beauty through the long hallway, his soul keeping time with the spirited waltzes, until gathered into the folds of the same manta with his senorita. The essentiality of the life of a Liman belle is pleasure.

The young ladies (senoritas) of the family either accompany their parents in the evening ramble or are attended by their personal servants; usually two young ladies walk together, followed by their attendants. Should they meet a gentleman of their acquaintance, they cordially invite him to join them in their passo.

If he be a Peruvian he takes his place behind the ladies and chats over their shoulders as they pass along. Should he happen to be a grengo, as foreigners are termed, he would be politely asked to walk in the rear, and would suffer from solid indifference unless he should sufficiently compensate the attendants—which is no difficult matter—to remain in some alley until the return of the ladies.

If this arrangement is consented to by all, the young people seek secluded streets, where they are not liable to meet with parents and friends and where all formality is thrown aside.

If it should transpire that this gentleman calls upon these young ladies the following evening, the coolness of his reception would indicate that they had never before met; but he would be ushered into the parlor and hospitably received by the family.

Young ladies are not allowed to receive gentlemen callers in private. One of the parents, a sister or an attendant, assists in entertaining, and at times the whole family.

The mother, knowing the passionate disposition of her race, constantly endeavors to screen her daughter from secluded male company until her marriage. After marriage she is free to invite to her house all her lovers and to there entertain them, whether her husband is there or not.

This newly gained freedom extends further—to the extent that she is now at liberty to indulge in flirtations upon the streets or in the gardens, with her bewitching glances luring her admirers to her home.

However, many daughters are exasperated beyond patience from observing the flirtations of a married sister or other relative, and devote their evenings upon the balcony passing notes to their lovers.

Perhaps he, a stranger, first attracted her attention as she leaned over the balluster by passing several times beneath the balcony. If she desires his acquaintance he receives some signal which emboldens him to bow or pass a card to the lady.

The initiatory being over, evenings are passed in this manner until the acquaintance has ripened into friendship, when the gentleman is free to call or stroll through the plaza or garden. These balcony scenes being clandestine, they are not enacted until a late hour, when the mother is unconscious of her daughter's whereabouts, as she has been carefully watched until she is safely lodged in her bedroom, with its barred windows.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Is so vastly superior to any other sarsaparilla or blood purifier, that one has well said: "Its health-giving effects upon the blood and entire human organism, are as much more positive than the remedies of a quarter of a century ago, as the steam-power of to-day is in advance of the slow and laborious drudgery of years ago."

"While suffering from a severe bilious attack in March, 1883, a friend in Peoria, Ill., recommended Hood's Sarsaparilla. I tried the remedy, and was permanently cured." J. A. SHEPARD, travelling agent for Deyoe & Co., Fulton Street, N. Y.

Deafness Can't be Cured

by local application, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucus lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflamation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucus surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that we can not cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circular, free.

MAIL AND EXPRESS

The Advocate of the Best Interests of the Home—The Enemy of the Saloon. The Friend of American Labor. The Favorite Newspaper of People of Refined Tastes Everywhere.

The New York MAIL AND EXPRESS, the favorite American newspaper of many people of intelligent and cultivated tastes, has recently made some noteworthy improvements, materially increasing its general excellence. It is in the broadest sense

A National Newspaper,

most carefully edited, and adapted to the wants and tastes of intelligent readers throughout the entire country—North, South, East and West. It is a thoroughly clean paper, free from the corrupting, sensational and demoralizing trash, miscalled news, which defiles the pages of too many city papers.

OUR POLITICS.

We believe the Republican party to be the true instrument of the POLITICAL PROGRESS of the American people; and holding that the honest enforcement of its principles is the best guarantee of the national welfare, we shall support them with all our might; but we shall always treat opposing parties with consideration and fair play.

AGAINST THE SALOON.

The MAIL AND EXPRESS is the recognized National organ of the great Anti-Saloon Republican movement. It believes that the liquor traffic as it exists to-day in the United States is the enemy of society, a fruitful source of corruption in politics, the ally of anarchy, a school of crime, and, with its avowed purpose of seeking to corruptly control elections and legislation, is a menace to the public welfare and deserves the condemnation of all good men.

The death of Mrs. Chas. F. Smith was one of the saddest that has occurred in this community for many a day. Mrs. Smith was taken sick very suddenly on Monday afternoon of last week, and was unconscious nearly all the time until death relieved her from intense suffering on Friday evening. She leaves a large circle of friends and neighbors who mourn their sad loss. She was a devoted christain wife and mother. Since their return to the farm from Tecumseh, she has been kept very close at home, administering to the comfort of her afflicted companion, without a murmur and ever ready to cheer her family on with a word of encouragement at all times. They consulted her in every instance for her advice and instruction. The funeral services were held at her late home on Monday forenoon last. The attendance of friends to pay their last respects to a dear friend was very large. Rev. J. A. Lowry officiated. A quartette of the choir furnished some very appropriate selections. The casket was trimmed with heavy drapery and on the foot rested a pillow of flowers; in the center, very artistically arranged, was the word "Mother," it was a selection by the three younger children. At the head of the casket, on a stand was a beautiful floral design, 'Gates Ajar,' a gift from the young friends of Tecumseh and Ridgeway who enjoyed a very pleasant evening there only a few days since. Mrs. Smith was born in Hunsingor, England, Oct. 26, 1830, making her at her death in her 59th year. She was the oldest daughter of Rev. Thomas Lupton, and came to this country in 1831. January 14, '47, she became the wife of Charles F. Smith, who is left to mourn the loss of one who has been a true companion for forty-two years. Ten children blessed their home, four of whom have gone on before to welcome her coming.

The remains were laid at rest in the family lot in Hickory cemetery, near the village.

FOR THE RELIEF OF IRELAND.

A Bill Which Parnell is Holding Ready to Spring on Parliament.

LONDON, March 9.—There is renewed talk in liberal and nationalist circles about the proposed bill for the relief of Ireland, that Mr. Parnell is believed to be holding ready to spring on Parliament at an opportune moment. Very few claim to know anything about the measure, but it is thought it was this that both Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Parnell referred to in their recent speeches in the house of commons. The more knowing of the Irish members assert that the bill is to be made the stumbling block for the government. They say if the government had dared to introduce in the present session an Irish land measure Parnell would not formulate his, but they claim that any Irish measure will defeat the government. Parnell's bill is said to be built somewhat on the lines of the London county council scheme, and insures to Ulster a representation which serves practically as a local home rule measure. The opposition will vote solidly for it, and the moderate conditions of the bill, as foreshadowed by Parnell's moderate speech, are expected to win enough wavering Tories and Unionists, who are disgusted with the expose of The Times and the government, to insure its passage. It will thus accomplish two objects—relief for Ireland and the defeat of the Tory government. A general election will follow, and it would be difficult to find in England a Liberal who did not believe, or a Tory who did not fear, that a general election would place Gladstone again in power.

How Chamberlain Met His Bride.

LONDON, March 9.—A story is going the rounds about Mr. Joseph Chamberlain's recent wooing and marriage that may interest American readers. By a romantic coincident Mr. Chamberlain's son Austin played an important part in his father's marriage to Miss Endicott. The young man had met the lady at Washington the year before Mr. Chamberlain went there to negotiate the fisheries treaty. On his return he gave such glowing accounts of Miss Endicott that his father determined to meet the secretary's family and took an introduction from his son for this purpose. The sequel is known. The spell of fascination was cast over the father as it had been over the son, and the older gentleman, perhaps by experience bolder in matters of the heart, wooed and won the lady, who is younger than any of his children, for his bride.

Only Needed a Leader to Do Violence.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., March 9.—A large and excited crowd filled Market square this morning to indulge in free threats and execitable comments on the case of the Chinese, charged with debauching children. Anticipating a large crowd, Sheriff Burnham ordered a strong police force to be on hand. Four officers were stationed at all entrances to the city hall and no one was allowed to pass unless having business in the court house. On account of the defense not being able to secure an interpreter, the case was postponed until Monday morning and the Chinese were taken back to jail, but no attempt at violence was made; yet if a leader had put in an appearance the indignation of the crowd might have resulted in the hanging of the Chinamen to a lamp post. No further trouble is feared.

Horrible Accident to a Cripple.

MANSON, Iowa, March 9.—A horrible accident occurred Friday afternoon in the suburbs of this town. Carl Redman, a German, who is crippled and hunchback, was smoking his pipe and driving a fractious team. There was hay in the bottom of the wagon and it is supposed that a spark from the pipe caught in the hay. The team became frightened at the fire and ran away, throwing Redman out, his clothing being on fire. The injury he received in the fall and his crippled condition prevented him from extinguishing the fire, and when found half an hour later part of his body was burned to a crisp, although he was still alive. He was taken to town and medical aid was summoned, but he died in a short time in terrible agony.

Montana Cattle in Good Condition.

ST. PAUL, Minn., March 9.—A special to The Pioneer Press from Great Falls, M. T., says: Mr. McShane, manager of one of the largest cattle companies in the Judith basin, has just arrived in town. He reports that stock is in a better condition than it has been for many years. A large increase in calves is expected. Green grass has made its appearance on the high prairie and foot-hills. Farming operations are being pushed forward with much vigor around Great Falls. The acreage of wheat sown this year will be at least four times as much as that of last year. Immigrants are arriving daily and taking up good lands.

Charged with Plagiarism.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, March 9.—The College Review at Oberlin makes a charge of plagiarism against E. C. Ritsher, of Beloit, (Wis.) college, who won first prize in the inter-state oratorical contest at Lawrence, Kan., in May last. The Review asserts that part of the oration was taken from Guizot's "History of Civilization" and publishes comparisons in double columns to prove its assertion. Oberlin's representative, Howard Russell, won second prize, and if the charge against Ritsher is sustained, Russell will stand first.

An Endowment to Charity.

CLEVELAND, O., March 9.—John Huntington, an original member of the Standard Oil company, Friday signed a deed conveying $200,000 worth of 6 per cent stocks to a board of seven trustees composed of leading citizens. The stocks will be called the "John Huntington Benevolent trust," and the interest thereon is to be distributed among a dozen charitable institutions. Part of the interest is to be held until the fund amounts to $300,000, when all the dividends are to be devoted to charity.

A CROON ON HENNACLIFF.

Thus said the rushing raven
Unto his hungry mate,
"Ho, gossip! for Bude Haven
There be corpses six or eight.
Cawk, cawk! the crew and skipper
Are wallowing in the sea,
So there's a savory supper
For my old dame and me."

"Cawk! gaffer! thou art dreaming
The shore hath wreckers bold,
Would rend the yelling seamen
From the clutching billows' hold
Cawk! cawk! they'd hound for booty,
Into the dragon's den,
And shout 'For death or duty?'
If the prey were drowning men."

Loud laughed the listening surges
At the guess our grandam gave;
You might call them Boonerges
From the thunder of their wave!
And mockery followed after
The seabird's leering brood,
That filled the skies with laughter
From Lundy Light to Bude.

"Cawk! cawk!" then said the raven;
"I am four score years and ten,
Yet never in Bude Haven
Did I croak for rescued men.
They will save the captain's girdle,
And shirt, if shirt there be,
But leave their blood to curdle
For my old dame and me."

So said the rushing raven
Unto his hungry mate:
"Ho, gossip! for Bude Haven!
There be corpses six or eight.
Cawk! cawk! the crew and skipper
Are wallowing in the sea;
Oh, what a dainty supper
For my old dame and me."

EVIDENCE BROKEN.

An English lawyer once said that circumstantial evidence would hang the king of England. While that was putting it pretty strong, it is admitted that a chain of circumstantial evidence has often sent men to the gallows. If a circumstance can be explained away, it is but a shadow. If it cannot be explained away, it becomes a menace to the prisoner's life. A witness may be bribed, abducted or impeached. A circumstance is a lion in the path demanding blood.

It has been often asserted that innocent men have been hung on circumstantial evidence. There may have been such instances, but they have been rare indeed. In my own experience in law and detective work I have seen some curious things about circumstantial evidence. It is, in one sense, the strongest chain which can be forged, in another the very weakest.

About twenty years ago I was detailed on a murder case in a Kentucky town. It was not to work up the case, but to save if possible the young man arrested for the crime. When I got the facts and details, I felt helpless to accomplish anything. He was a young man of twenty-three, named Graham, and was of respectable family. He had been engaged to a young lady of the highest respectability, but they had quarreled about something. Common friends had brought about a reconciliation, but a new suitor had appeared upon the scene, and Graham's jealousy had provoked another quarrel. He had not visited her for two weeks, when, on the evening of Sunday, Oct. 30, one of Graham's friends met him and said:

"Your rival is up at Lossing's, and seems bound to cut you out. Adele seems very sweet on him!"

Graham truly loved the girl, and this speech made him wild. He turned pale, trembled, and finally said:

"He is an adventurer and an interloper! Let him look out for himself!"

An hour later he started for Lossing's. He passed several people, who saw that he was excited. The house stood back from the road in a grove of trees, and was approached by two paths or drives from the front. Graham fully intended to enter the house, but when he came upon the grounds his courage failed him. He was afraid he might say or do something rash in his present mood, and very sensibly decided to return to town and defer his call till the next day. Next morning his rival's dead body was found on one of the drives, about half way between the house and the fence. He had been struck down with a bludgeon. Conclusions are always jumped at in murder cases.

Two of the negro servants were at once arrested, but before noon they were set at liberty and Graham was taken into custody. The chain already contained several links. Others were added the moment he was arrested. He was dreadfully agitated, hesitated to acknowledge that he had been near the place, and a blood stain was found on the right sleeve of his coat. Before he had been in jail one day even his own father believed him a murderer. He was examined and bound over, and it was only after that event that he began to protest his innocence. The girl who had been the cause of it came nobly to his rescue. While she truly loved him, she had been willing to make him jealous, and when murder had come of it, as she believed, she felt terribly conscience stricken and anxious to believe in his protestations of innocence.

When I came upon the ground the state had its case all worked up, and when I went over it to look for a flaw I could find none. I had to acknowledge that I was without hope. Indeed, I believed Graham guilty. His own explanations rather strengthened that belief. Lossing's house faced the east. The highway in front ran north and south. The lawn was twenty rods wide, and one drive led in from the north and the other from the south end. Graham approached from the north. He would naturally turn in at the first drive, but he claimed to have gone on to the second. He followed it to the house, passed around it, played for two or three minutes with the dogs, and then circled about the fish pond and took a short cut across the grove and struck the road, not hitting the north path at all. The dead man had come from the village as well, and on foot. He had come and attempted to return by the north drive.

If Graham was innocent, who was guilty?

Not the slightest suspicion had been directed elsewhere. It seemed hopeless to look. I questioned and cross questioned him, but he could not give me the slightest foundation for a clew or a theory. What I got came by accident. I ask to see the blood stained clothing, and I found it to be a single daub of blood on a white vest. It was a curious mark, such as I had never seen before, and when I quietly investigated further I discovered that the murdered man had been struck on the back of his head and fallen forward on his face. He had very thick hair, and while the blow had crushed the skull, he had bled but little. The blood would not spurt from such a blow. The body had not been lifted, and so how did Graham get that blood stain? Accident gave me the knowledge. I was looking the ground over at Lossing's for the fourth or fifth time, when one of the dogs came and leaped upon me in a caressing way. Lossing observed it and remarked:

"Old Fan was always very fond of Graham, and I believe she misses him. Here, Fan, let me look at your paw. Ah! it's about as well as ever, isn't it?"

"What ailed her paw?" I asked.

"She got a terrible cut on a piece of glass a few weeks ago."

"About the time Graham was arrested?"

"Yes."

"Then it was her bloody paw that made the mark on his vest that night!"

"Good heavens, but it must have been!"

I had a clew and a hope. Everything changed in an hour, and I now believed Graham innocent and went to work to secure proofs. I posted up to Louisville and examined the police records for arrests. I followed a score or more of cases to their finish, but got nothing. It was my belief that a white man committed the crime, and that he meant robbery, but was frightened off. I returned to the village and looked everybody over, but got no satisfaction. The day of the trial was coming and I was in despair, but accident came to my aid again. I happened into the hotel barn as the landlord pulled a lot of rubbish out of a stall. Hidden away with it was a fine saddle, and as it was brought to light the man exclaimed:

"Bless me, here is the dead man's saddle!"

"Was it missing?" I asked.

"It was stolen on the night of his murder. That's the reason he went down to Lossing's on foot."

Who stole it? What for? An outsider, who stole the saddle for its worth, would have carried it off. An insider only would have stored it in the stall. Who was inside? A white man and two negro assistants. Within an hour I had ascertained that the white man, whose name was Foster, was absent for an hour on the evening of the murder, and that since he had acted very queerly. I arrested him, charged him with the crime, and he did not hold out fifteen minutes. His motive was robbery. He did not intend to kill his victim, but only to stun him. He had just struck him when the dogs barked greeting to Graham, and, overcome by sudden fright, Foster dashed away and dared not return. He thought he had only to keep still to render himself safe, and, but for my being present when the saddle was found, he might never have been suspected. Graham was cleared and Foster was hanged. The change had been brought about by the fondling of a dog.—New York Sun.

A Clerical Error.

In a country church the curate had to give out two notices, the first of which was about baptisms and the latter had to do with a new hymn book. Owing to an accident he inverted the order, and gave out as follows: "I am requested to give notice that the new hymn book will be used for the first time in this church on Sunday next, and I am also requested to call the attention to the delay which often takes place in bringing children to be baptized: they should be brought on the earliest day possible. This is particularly pressed on mothers who have young babies." "And for the information of those who have none," added the rector, in gentle, kindly tones, and who being deaf had not heard what had previously been said; "for the information of those who have none, I may state that if wished they can be obtained on application in the vestry immediately after service to day. Limp ones, one shilling each; with stiff backs, two shillings.—London Figaro.

Bribed with Tobacco.

A suggestive yarn about the abuse of the fee system by constables is told by a Gardiner, Me., man. Officers down on the Kennebec have pocketed lots of money from fees for arresting tramps. It seems to have been the custom in times gone by that when one of these gentlemen of leisure was committed to jail he was presented with a plug of tobacco by the officer who arrested him, with the understanding that when his time had expired and he came round on the circuit again he should look out for his official friend and help him to get another fee. The increase of this branch of the police duty caused competition to spring up among the members of the force, and it is stated as a fact that some of the bribes of tobacco ran as high as a pound.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

"The Passion of Christ."

The most curious book in the world is one that is neither written nor printed. Every letter of the text is cut into the leaf, and as alternate leaves are of blue paper it is as easily read as the best print. The labor required and the patience necessary to cut each leaf may be imagined. The work is so perfect that it seems as though done by machinery, but every character was made by hand. The book is entitled "The Passion of Christ," and is now in a museum in France.—London Life.

Low satin shoes laced up with silk ribbon are finished at the top by a bow of ribbon nearly an inch wide that will fall over the toe, thus relieving the stiff line about the ankle where the shoe ends. A few of the red and leather half shoes have narrow gilt or silver braid laced back and forth across the toe, while some have tiny spangles tacked all over side and toe.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in lining membranes of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proven this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permentally cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. DIXON & SON, 303 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Indian Names in Wisconsin.

Our readers are aware that most of the names of places in this vicinity are derived from the Indian tongue, some of them having been altered somewhat for the sake of euphony, as, for instance, Peshtigo for Pesh-ta-go. We interviewed our old friend Captain Powell, the other day, who is well along in years, and was born here, and is almost as familiar with the Indian language as the Indians themselves, and he gave us the following as the significations of some of the names of the places in this vicinity:

Sanawaco—The yellow sand.
Oconto—The place of the pickerel.
Pensaukee—The place of the brants.
Peshtigo—Snapping turtle.
Menominee—Wild rice.
Menekaune—The place where the lodges are; literally, the village.
Escanaba—A flat rock.
Manitowoc—The dwelling of the spirit.
Kewaunee—The name of a kind of duck.

Thus it will be seen that the Indians named places after some peculiarity of the location; or, as in the case of Manitowoc, after some superstition. Most of the American names are utterly meaningless, as applied to the locality, and we like the Indian plan the best.

Take for instance, Appleton, Seymour, New London, Preble, etc., which convey no idea whatever. Bellevue is better, but it is French, and is duplicated in other languages, as, for instance, Buena Vista, in Spanish. Fond du Lac is good and conveys an idea.

Oshkosh perpetuates the name of an Indian chief, and Marinette that of an Indian woman and both are very good.—Green Bay Advocate.

Rev. H. H. Fairall, D. D., editor of the Iowa Methodist, says editorially, in the November (1883) number of his paper: "We have tested the merits of Ely's Cream Balm and believe that, by a thorough course of treatment, it will cure almost every case of catarrh. Ministers, as a class, are afflicted with head and throat troubles, and catarrh seems more prevalent than ever. We cannot recommend Ely's Cream Balm too highly."

ART needle-work and valuable embroideries are frequently ruined, or their beauty much impaired by washing them with ordinary soap, which is too rank for such delicate articles. A simple, and the proper method is to make suds of hot water and IVORY SOAP, and allow to cool till lukewarm. This solution, while very effective, is perfectly harmless.

A WORD OF WARNING.

There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

"FROM THINE EYES.

From thine eyes, by fair disguises,
Love is glancing unrevealed,
O'er thy face in sweet surprises
Blushes wander unconcealed.
Dare I ask thee, though unbidden,
Of thy secret therein hidden?

On thy breast a rose reposing,
Jealous to thy blushes turned,
Lifts its leaves in pride disclosing
Where the sun's glow ardent burned.
As the rose unfolds its glory
Dare I tell thee all my story?

In thy hand a lily blest is,
Holden near thy gentle breath,
Fairer far thy snowy breast is
Rival and it swoons to death;
As the dying flower allures me
So thy gentleness assures me!

By thine eyes, in fair disguises,
Love's sweet secret is revealed;
By thy blushes in surprises
Love has neared me unconcealed.
Dare I bid love thus to lead me?
Dare I tell thee how I need thee?

Envious rose, so proud reposing,
On her breast more fragrant grow;
Swooning lily, die disclosing
All her passion thou mayest know;
As I dare to ask her choose me,
And I pray her not refuse me!

"KIVERED."

Were I asked to name the races of the south, I should answer: "White, black, and the mountaineer." The latter belongs to a distinctive race. While he may be classed with the white as far as color goes, his tastes, habits, characteristics and mode of life are peculiarly his own. If he likes you he will make any sacrifice to oblige you. If he hates you he will seek your life with a determination which nothing can damp. The great world beyond his mountain home is a sealed book to him. He lives in himself, by himself and for himself.

I was riding over the spur of the Cumberland mountains, which Gen. Morgan (Federal) held so gallantly while Buell and Bragg were driving each other by turns over Kentucky, when I lost my way. The mountain trails of the south are dangerous puzzles to a stranger. They run up and down—twist—turn—dodge—lose themselves in dark ravines and seem to suddenly end in dark and lonely gaps. There is a feeling of loneliness which you cannot shake off, and a feeling of anxiety which rides with you and keeps every sense alert. Every rod of the trail has its ambush, and every quarter of a mile its cliff, seemingly ready to fall upon you. I came to a spot where three trails branched away. It was luck and chance. I took one which led me into a long, dark ravine, where the summer sun has never yet touched the icicles on the rugged rocks nor cooled the mountain rivulet pouring over the moss grown ledges. After going a mile I felt that I was wrong, and was about to turn back when a voice suddenly called out through the semi-darkness:

"Stranger, you ar' kivered! Throw up your hands!"

If that command ever reaches your ears, obey it at once and do your arguing subsequently. It means that your head or heart is in point blank range of bullet or buckshot, with a finger resting on the trigger and ready to pull if you don't obey the summons.

Up went my hands.

After a long half minute a mountaineer, who had a dead sight on me with a double barreled shotgun across a point of rock twenty feet ahead, stepped into view on the trail and said:

"Stranger, slip down!"

I slipped off the saddle.

"Now lead yer mule up that ravine to the right!"

I simply saw a man six feet high, straight as an arrow, long haired, whiskers unkempt, dress, that of a mountaineer. Yes, I saw more. He held the gun fair for my breast. One suspicious move on my part and I was a dead man. He spoke in a low voice, but there was that in his tones which chilled me. Without a second look at him I took the mule by the bits and led him up the ravine. We had not gone twenty rods before I scented a whisky still. At the end of five rods more we were in a rude camp. Two moonshiners sat on a log, guns across their knees, and back of and below them a still was running off its extract of corn.

"One o' them spies!" said the man who had followed me as I let go of the mule and sat down on a stump.

"A good ketch!" growled one of the sitters.

"Mighty kind in him to come yere!" chuckled the other.

They were moonshiners, and they took me for a spy sent out by the government official of that district. I looked from one to the other. There was a determination in each look—an implacable sternness of expression which would have warned a genuine spy that his hour had come. Not one glance of pity—not one line of mercy. A prisoner at the stake among the Apaches would have had more hope.

These men were law breakers—outlaws—being hunted after every day in the year. Why? Because they were making a living—keeping soul and body together—in the only way open to them. The bits of valleys in the grim old Cumberlands will grow corn and potatoes. The potatoes are wanted for the table. If there is more corn than the razor backed hog or the shackling mule can consume it is a dead loss. Convey it to market—two days to go and two to come, and sell it for two bits a bushel, and the owner and seller would starve on the way. Make it into a barrel or two of whisky and it will bring cash on the spot, or very near it. It is not to grow rich—not hoping to better his condition—but simply to live. It is against the law of the land. The mountaineer may go ragged and hungry, but he must not distill. It is the only law he breaks. Aye! he even lives closer than most of us to all the commandments. He breaks it because grim necessity forces him to. He is outlawed and hunted that officials may make fees.

I knew all this before I looked into the stern, set faces around me, and I knew why I looked in vain for a gleam of mercy.

"I am no spy," I said, as I looked about me. "I am a traveler making for Cumberland Gap, and I've lost my way."

"Go up that path!" commanded the man who had captured me.

"Not until I satisfy you that I am not a spy."

"Kiver him, Joe!" whispered the man to one of the others, and a shot gun covered my breast again.

The leader ran back down the ravine to be sure that no one had followed us. When he returned he said:

"Say yer prayers, stranger! Joe, when I riz my hand do you plug him!"

"Did any of you ever hear of Joe Rickaby?" I asked, trying hard to keep a steady voice.

"Wall, what if we had?" asked the leader.

"About a year ago I found him in jail in B——. He had been there for several months. He was sick and out of money, and I aided him. Here's his name in my note book. See?"

The man with the gun lowered his weapon and came closer and asked:

"Was anybody else in the jail with Joe?"

"Yes—half a dozen—all moonshiners. I sent in $2 worth of pipes and tobacco, and I got one of them some quinine."

"He's the chap, sure's shooting!" exclaimed the man as I turned to the others.

"On my soul he is!" added the leader as he came up and removed my hat.

"Durn our buttons!" whispered the third.

In a minute more it was all right, and they were shaking my hand so vigorously that my shoulder ached. The humble cabin a quarter of a mile away was open to me forevermore, and it was two days before they would let go of me to resume my journey. The wife at the cabin had more perception than the men. She looked me over and then said:

"Oh! sassafras, but you fellers is all blind! Hain't he Yank all over and all through! Whar's the sunburn? Whar's the lingo? Whar's the hoss pistols? Purty muss you'd hev got yerselves into killin' a Yank, who don't keer if every branch in Tennessee runs cl'ar whisky! Better not be so handy with them guns arter this."

The leader walked beside me for five miles when I left, and as we parted he said:

"Stranger, when I told ye to say yer prayers I meant they should be mighty short. I'd hev given ye about ten seconds, for I wanted to git yer body outen the way. Yer couldn't hev told us nuthin' else to prove that you wasn't a spy. Give this paw a farewell squeeze, and don't lay it up agin me."—M. Quad in Detroit Free Press.

A Rotation with Live Stock.

A practical farmer suggests in American Agriculturist the wisdom of a system of rotation with live stock. He says: Late in August I had four hens "come off" with about forty Langshan chicks. These, hatched from the same lot of eggs, were fed in the same way and managed under exactly similar conditions right through except that three hens with thirty chicks were placed and kept on a comparatively new piece of land, while the fourth hen, with the remainder of the chickens, had to be satisfied with quarters in the old poultry yard. Those on new soil grew with wonderful rapidity, and have always remained perfectly healthy, while the chicks in the old yard, although taking a fine start, soon began to droop and to die off, until now there is not one left. Diarrhea took them all. As thorough or (as I am tempted to call it) "wide" rotation is one of the best and most simple preventives of fungus diseases in cereals, vegetables and fruits, and often of injurious insects, so, if practiced with poultry, it must aid in preventing the attacks of cholera, dysentery, catarrh, and especially that dread of the poultry keeper, the gapes, as it is well known that moist ground is one of the links in the transfer chain of the gape worm from one fowl or chick to another. The same principle, carried out in the management of hogs, is a reasonably sure protection from the attacks of swine plague or cholera, as I have had frequent opportunity to observe.

Elevators for Home Use.

The ingenious plan proposed by a Berlin inventor, of a simple and inexpensive elevator for private dwellings in place of the ordinary staircase, has attracted some attention as a long felt desideratum. It is on the principle of the inclined railway, and the motive power is furnished by the city water, which is applied in the cellar; each flight has its separate chair, so that, for example, one person can ascend from the first to the second story while another is on his way from the second to the third, or still another is descending from the fifth to the fourth. The chair, being of the width of the human body, requires but little space, and still leaves a free passage for any who wish to walk up or down instead of riding. It is set in motion by a simple pressure upon one of its arms, while after it has been used it slides back to the bottom step, its descent being regulated in such a manner that the carrying of a passenger is a matter of entire safety.—New York Telegram.

The Enterprising Reporter's Capture.

When Sara, the famous high kicker, was here with Emily Soldene, she was written up and illustrated in the columns of the paper which seems to have a weakness for high kickers. When the article on Sara was written up it was desired to obtain her portrait for a cut. Fred Hall was then the city editor and he directed one of his reporters to call on Sara and secure a picture from her. In about an hour he returned to the office. He entered the local room and said: "Mr. Hall, I couldn't get her picture, but here's Sara," and the wonderful high kicker pirouetted gracefully into the sanctum, while Mr. Hall removed his pipe from his mouth and gazed at her in amazement through his glasses. Then he hastily directed that she be removed to the artist's room and sketched.—Chicago Herald.

A Scrap of paper Saves Her Life.

It was just an ordinary scrap of wrapping paper, but it saved her life. She was in the last stages of consumption, told by the physicians that she was incurable and could live only a short time; she weighed less than seventy pounds. On a piece of wrapping paper she read of Dr. King's New Discovery, and got a sample bottle; it helped her, she bought a large bottle, it helped her more, bought another and grew better fast, continued its use and is now strong, healthy, rosy, plump, weighing 140 pounds. It is a book of thrilling interest and is finding an extensive sale wherever it has been been introduced. We commend Mr. McLouth to the favorable consideration of our citizens. The following testimonial will show what good judges think of the work.

ADRIAN, Mich., Nov. 29, '88.

FRIEND LEWIS F. MCLOUTH:—You have asked me to express my opinion of Geo. Bidwell's narrative, a book entitled "Forging His Chains." I have read the same with interest and believe that any person so doing will not only be interested but instructed, especially regarding crime and penal servitude in England. The work is a stern verification of the old adage that "murder will out," and the terrible punishment meted out to Bidwell and his associates, exemplifies the fact that crime and evil doers live in an atmosphere of apprehensive doubt and are of all men the most miserable. In this it points a moral. Truly Yours.

CALIFORNIA LETTER.

Question Second. What can I do after I get there? First, you need not expect to get a living here without work, but with industry and economy you can make a better and pleasanter living here than in the east. Everyone coming here would not be entirely suited, no more than that all are entirely suited in the east.

There are many avenues open for profitable employment in this country though at present all branches of business are depressed, owing to unhealthy speculation, yet the growth and development of this section is so sure that investments here will surely bring good returns. Manufacturing enterprises will be started and mechanics will find plenty of employment also laboring men; but the surest and best investments will be in the country. There is a good deal of government land to be had yet, though most of it is well back among the hills and mountains. Yet the land is rich and well adapted for fruit and agriculture, and it will not be many years before good roads and market facilities will be established, and one who is willing to come here and make up his mind to take the country as he finds it and be willing to endure some privations and hard work to make a home with industry and economy, in a few years will have a home that cannot be surpassed in the east anywhere. Let a man devote his time and labor with the exercise of judgment, on ten acres of land here and he will reap more profit than he can on 80 acres in the east. I don't say that every one can do it, but it can be, and is done here. There is one drawback to the accomplishing these results, that is the tendency of the climate is, to induce laziness, or negligence of labor and industry, and also to lead to extravagance in living and expenditures. I know of no part of the country where labor judiciously applied will bring so large returns. This is comparatively a new country and is yet to be developed.

Question 4. Is there any chance for a poor man? Yes, but the more money a man has when he gits here, the easier he can get started. His chances are as good here as anywhere if he is willing to work, but it is no place for a lazy man unless he has plenty of money. This question is answered in a great measure in the above, but the question of living here is to be considered in this connection. The idea is prevalent in the east that living is high here; at a casual glance it would appear to be so, but on consideration and a little figuring it will be found erroneous, for the necessaries of life the prices are but little higher. Fresh meats are as cheap, but salt meats are higher; flour is as cheap but potatoes are higher; groceries are as cheap except sugars and coffees are a little higher; coal and wood is higher; rent and board higher; clothing, dry goods, and boots and shoes are as cheap as in the east. Take it for the whole year and consider that there are but a few days when fire is needed but for cooking, etc., and that not nearly the amount of clothing is needed, it will be found that with the exception of rent and board, living is as cheap here as in the east. But as this is a land where we have fruit and vegetables the year round, and the climate is fine for pleasures, there are strong inclinations for expenditures for living and pleasures that are not thought of in the east, but with equal economy a poor man can lay up more money, or make himself a home sooner and easier here. And another item to be considered is that he can work out of doors nearly every day in the year. A man's weekly wages will buy more than they will generally in the east. Wages for mechanics and laborers are good, and the prospects are good for a revival of business, and a demand for all kind of labor.

I would not advise anyone to come here only those who have plenty of money to live on and enjoy life. I write in the interest of no man or corporation, but simply to give as correct an account of the country as I find it and can learn of it. If a poor man can get hold of a small piece of land where he can raise his own vegetables and fruits, keep a cow and chickens, he can be independent.

Question 5. What can I raise that will pay? Everything that you can in the east, and nearly all kinds of fruits by selecting proper localities. All the grains bring sure and good crops in localities suited for them, though corn cannot be successfully grown only in localities where the nights are warm, but as good corn is grown here as in the east, and wheat, oats and barley produce heavier crops and of superior quality, and sure crops every year, without any of the casualities attending the crops in the east. There is no hurry and worry in securing the crops when ripe as there is no fear of storms to injure them, they stand for weeks without any damage. Wheat, oats and barley are grown extensively for hay; this is about all the hay used here. Alfalfa clover makes the best of hay and is beginning to be extensively grown where the land is adapted to it. The grains for hay are cut just as they begin to ripen, and they make good feed and not much grain is fed to horses and cattle, and costs about one dollar and ten cents a hundred.

Apples do well in all parts of the country, but the best quality are grown on the hills though they do not grow as large. Pears do best on the dobe or clay lands and grow to a very large size and generally of fine quality. California pears surpass those grown in any other part of the county. All the deciduous fruits do finely here and are very profitable, while many of the tropical fruits are grown to perfection. San Diego county beats the world in oranges and lemons, having every time taken the highest award of merit at exhibitions, both state and national, and over competition of foreign countries.

I cannot name all the fruits that can be successfully grown here. The apricot does splendidly and is one of the finest fruits grown; it surpasses the peach, which does well here. The English walnut does exceedingly well here and is very profitable to grow; the almond does well but is not as profitable. The Japanese plum, the Japanese persimmon, pomegranite, guavas, banana, fig, plum, prime, cherry and many other fruits are grown to perfection. Some fruits bear the year around, as the orange and lemon. Strawberries if properly planted, will give ripe berries the year round, but the main crop is in the summer; thay will bear fruit at about such a time after planting, and by proper planting berries can be had at all seasons. With the exception of oranges and lemons, all fruit trees and plants have a season of rest, many of the fruit trees are evergreen. The fig bears two crops in the season, the second crop setting as the first crop begins to ripen. The grape in all its varieties succeed amazingly here, and produce enormous crops that would astonish eastern people It is not uncommon to find branches weighing 3 to 5 pounds. The wine grape has been extensively grown and large quantities of wine made, but the growing of the grape for wine is going out of date and the eastern grape is being planted in its stead. Many wine vineyards have been dug up. The experiment has been made of drying the wine grape, and it has been profitable as it proves to make a fine sauce and pastry fruit and sells well. The production of raisins is becoming a leading enterprise and can be made very profitable. The California raisin leads the world. Figs are very profitable now they are gitting the varieties best adapted to this climate. The olive does finely and is very profitable both for oil and for pickeling; it does best back from the sea coast away from the fogs. The establishment of canneries and evaporators will enhance the profit of fruit growing.

It has been thought by many that fruit-growing was going to be overdone here, but the market is constantly extending, and transportation facilities increased, added to the fact that better fruit and of greater variety are grown here than anywhere else in the country, it cannot be overdone, tho' to the ordinary observer, seeing the amount of fruit being planted every season, it would look like it was being over done.

As to vegetables, California cannot be equaled in any part of the country; all varieties grow to perfection the year around, with proper planting and care, and their production is enormous. Tomatoes are perennial planted where frost will not injure it, growing year after year bearing fruit all the time; the best will grow continually, producing seed after the first season and will grow to an enormous size. Potatoes do splendidly, producing large crops, large tubers. I have seen the largest potatoes here I ever saw, both Irish and sweet, but as a general thing the quality is inferior to our eastern potatoes, but in some sections they are of very fine flavor. Cauliflower and cabbage do exceedingly well; the cabbage worm is not known here yet, neither is the potato bug. I have never seen anywhere else such fine heads of Cauliflower as I have seen here. Most of the gardening here is done by the Chinese who know nothing of improved varieties and methods of cultivation, and a white man, understanding the business and well read and posted in all improvments could make gardening pay well.

Success in the various branches treated of in this letter, is dependent on various conditions. That they are being, and can be made profitable is being demonstrated every day, but that is not saying that everyone will make it a success for many will lack the qualifications, tact and energy necessary to success. While good crop of most grains, vegetables and fruits can be produced from the winter rains, in most localities, judicious irrigation will double and thrible the crops. In some sections irrigation is indispensible, but the increase in results will far overbalance the cost of irrigation.

The water question will be considered in another article. A. D. S.

HARRIS-RAWSON.

At four o'clock in the afternoon of Wednesday, Feb., 27, 1889, the marriage of Miss Elizabeth Rawson to Theodore C. Harris took place at the Rawson homestead, on State street, in the presence of many relatives and a few intimate friends of the bride and groom. The spacious parlors were trimmed with flowers, the mantle before which stood the bridal party being banked with white lillies.

Rev. F. W. Raikes led the wedding procession followed by the groom with his best man, La Q. Rawson, brother of the bride, Miss Effie Dickerson, maid of honor, then the bride with her father. Following the impressive Episcopal service congratulations were received from those present and telegrams read from friends absent. Supper was then served. In the dining room the decorations were entirely pink. The mantle was draped in pink silk tied in a true lover's knot, the bride's table was trimmed with pink roses and pink ribbon. The chandelier was elaborated with smilax and pink hangings, and when the bride and groom and her little coterie of friends took their places the scene was indeed charming.

The bride wore a handsome gown of white Faille Francaise, decollete, diamond ornaments and carried a boquet of white roses.

Miss. Dickerson wore a costume of white Henrietta and moire and carried pink roses.

The bride is a grand-daughter of the late Dr. La Q. Rawson and daughter of Jos. L. Rawson, of this city. She has had charge of the homestead the past few years, since the death of Mrs. La. Q. Rawson, and was the companion of her grand-father till his death last September. Her marriage closes the hospitable old mansion for the present. She has been a prominent and much beloved member of Fremont society and leaves a host of friends in her native city who testified their regard by sending her numerous valuable and useful presents, beautiful pictures and souvenirs.

The groom is a prominent business man of Tecumseh, Mich., and was a former resident of Fremont.

The above matrimonial notice is clipped from last week's Fremont News. And so the rumor of Mr. T.C. Harris's intentions when suddenly he left town about wo weeks ago, has proven true. The groom has made a host of friends during his residence in Tecumseh and has established a fine business here. Although the bride is a stranger among us she will be cordially welcomed to the social circles of Tecumseh. Mr. Harris's friends will extend their warmest congratulations in his good fortune, in which the HERALD begs leave to heartily join.

A PATENT CAR STEP.

A late number of the Knoxville Tribune contains this account of a new invention. The patentee, Guy M. Belton, formerly resided in Tecumseh and was for a long time a member of Frank Davidson's family. It looks very much as though he had struck a big thing.

A reporter was shown yesterday a car step, which has just been patented. The traveling public has often cause to remember the inconvenience by which passengers are obliged to get off and on cars when there is no platform or when it is a long distance from the lower step to the ground. Often when there is a platform the distance is too great from the bottom step to reach the ground with any degree of ease and safety, and to elderly or infirm people this is a matter of importance. The Pullman cars have little stools which are placed on the ground by the porter, and when one gets on or off the car this stool is made to serve as one step, and is a great convenience to children, ladies and elderly gentlemen.

The patent referred to is a step to obviate the necessity of any stool, and being an extention by adding another step below the bottom one, simply by throwing a lever operated by a porter or brakeman, This lower bottom is a concealed step which can be extended at will. The device is remarkably simple and cheap, but strong and durable. There is a lever which works on a sliding below or hinge, and by one touch of the lever the step can be made to drop down when the car stops and passengers wish to get on or off.

The new device can be attached to any passenger car, without any change to the present steps and when not in use is out of sight.

This ingenious device is the patent of Mr. Guy M. Belton of our city. The gentlman is connected with the Unaka Timber company. He secured his patent January 8th, 1889.

GRADUAL failure of strength, extreme pallor of face, puffiness under the eyes, persistent swelling of the joints, abdomen and legs, unaccountable sharp pain in the heart, shortness of breath followed by the lungs filling up with water, which the kidneys fail to pass off—any one of the foregoing are symptoms of advanced kidney or Bright's Disease. The late Dr. Dio Lewis said, over his own signature, "If I found myself victim of a serious kidney trouble, I should use your preparation." Prof. Wm. H. Thompson, M. D., of the University of the City of New York, says: "More adults are carried off in this country by chronic kidney disease than by any one malady except consumption.

How is the baby? is the question often put to a mother, and many an answer comes, "thanks to Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup much better to day."

Now, Give Attention

To the purification of your blood, for at no season is the body so susceptible to the benefits to be delivered from a good medicine, as in March, April and May. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the people's favorate spring medicine. It stands unequaled for purifying the blood, curing scrofula, salt rheum, etc., regulating the kidneys and liver, repairing nerve tissues strengthening and invigorating the whole body, as well as checking the progress of acute and chronic disease, and restoring the afflicted parts to a natural, healthy condition. If you have never tried Hood's Sarsaparilla for your "spring medicine," do so this season.

A New Lease of Life.

The aged and weak have declared after using Speer's Port Wines that they felt as though they had a new lease of life by having their systems renovated by this pure strengthing wine made by Alfred Speer, of Passiac, N. The urine becomes scanty, high-colored and dense." Warner's Safe Cure has cured thousands of these symptoms, often called diseases, by putting the kidneys in a healthy condition

COMING—RANCH KING.

The attraction at the opera house next Tuesday night will be Jos. D. Clifton's Ranch King Co., producing the American comedy melodrama, Ranch King. The Cincinnati Enquirer says the following of the company:

Clifton's Ranch King Co. was seen last evening by an excellent house at the Grand. Ranch King is without exception a strong drama. The construction is different from the general melodrama of the present day no inconsistencies, a beautiful story and shows careful work by the author, Mr. Joseph D. Clifton. The company evidently were picked for their respective parts, as each and every member of the cast showed careful study, and the interest of the piece never lagged from the commencement to the end. Miss May Treat is a finished actress, and at once found favor with the audience. Mac M. Barne's conception of the Ranch King is deserving of great praise. Mr. Budd Ross as Dan, was great, and kept his audience in a state of merriment all through. Miss Kate Howard has been seen here before with the "Farmer's Daughter," in the title roll, and many pleasant recollections are associated with her last visit to our city.

We continue to invite a genera attendance at the gospel meetings at the opera house at 2:30 and 7 p.m. of each day. The meetings are intended to be in no sense sectarian. Brother Re s and wife were invited here and the meetings arranged for by members of the W. C. T. U.

The club has secured Mrs. Emery, of Lansing, to deliver an address some date this month. As many are confounding this club with the K. of L., the members wish it understood that it is entirely separate and distinct from that organization.

The old folks social given at the opera house last Thursday evening proved a very enjoyable affair. The old timers were on hand and enough young people too to make a good attendance. The music reminded one of the parties given forty years ago, and as dance music could not be excelled, Taken altogether it was a most enjoyable party. Such gatherings make the old folks feel young again.

The "Ranch King" drew another full audience last night, and it and the company improve upon acquaintance. Miss Howard as Kate Mannering and May Treat as Pug were warmly applauded, and the piece throughout elicited continuous applause. Miss Treat is full of life and vivacity, and she played the hoydenish part as naturally as it identified with the character. Budd Ross, the Irishman, does considerable ground and lofty tumbling. He would make an excellent clown in a pantomime.

Four of our high school students—two young men and their best girls—indulged in a little pedestrian exercise Tuesday afternoon, kind of a "go as you please." It pleased them to leave their studies, walk to Clinton, and ride back on the train. Nothing like outdoor exercise to rest the brain.

An organ concert, will be given at the M. E. church next Monday eve. Prof. York, of the conservatory of music at AnnArbor will preside at the organ. Mr. York is organist of the Church of Our Father of Detroit, and ranks among the best artists in the state. His last three months abroad were spent in grand concerts and private parties.

James Schemerhorn, the brilliant young editor of the Hudson Gazette, has been taking a week off to visit the scenes of his military career at West Point. He gave promise of becoming a good deal of a warrior when circumstances compelled him to give up his cadetship and return to Michigan to assume the support of his widowed mother and small brothers and sisters, but he assumed the task like a philosopher, and is not only doing his duty like a man, but is making one of the best weekly papers in the state. If he retains life and health the newspaper profession will hear from "Jim" Schermerhorn in no uncertain way, some day.—Evening News.

A young lady who was receiving a salary of but $3 per week took a course at the Tri-State Business College and "Best Shorthand School, Toledo, O, and in less than 6 months from time of entering was employed at a salary of $65 per month. Finely Illustrated Announcement containing full particulars of schools sent free.

The old saw mill located east of the Comfort grist mill in Raisin, was torn down last week. It was built fifty-three years ago this summer, and for many years it was one of the land marks of western progress. But the tide of empire has passed on towards the setting sun, and the days of the old saw mill are now numbered with the things that were. Peace to its ashes.

At the last regular meeting of Beers Post, 140, G. A. R., it was unanimously

Resolved, That we extend our heartfelt thanks to the several persons who so generously assisted us in making our entertainment a success. Also to the citizens of Tecumseh and vicinity for the cordial welcome and substantial patronage given our play, "By Force of Impulse," when presented at the Opera House, Tuesday evening, Feb. 26, 1889.

Died—In Clinton, Saturday, March 2, 1889, Eva, infant daughter of Sevillian E. and Martha Hendershot, of inflammation of the lungs, aged 11 months. The opening bud thus early removed from our fond embrace has been transplanted to that celestial clime where it will forever expand in immortal beauty, where the Savior said "Suffer little children to come untome, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

The following special appeared in this morning's Detroit Free Press:

Represen've Allen is a civil service reformer. He intends to let Democratic appointees in the second district serve out their terms. Loana Stacy, of Tecumseh, failed of confirmation by the Senate as postmaster there. Allen said to-day that notwithstanding the failure of the Senate to confirm her, Miss Stacy would be allowed to serve out her father's term. "The Stacy family," he says, "shall have the Tecumseh postoffice for four full years, and then I will take a hand in the work of appointing a successor."

A new card appears this week from the new firm of Heesen & Son. Geo. Heesen has long been recognized as one of our leading business men and he has done a wise thing in taking into partnership his son Rudolph. Dolph has been a clerk in the store for some time and has become well posted in the business, and the new arrangement is a very appropriate one. The HERALD cordially welcomes the new firm among its patrons, wishing it the full measure of success which it deserves.

Miss Gay Lewis, a popular and much esteemed musician of Adrian will assist Harry Williams in a concert at the opera house, Monday evening. On account of the close application to study she has not until recently given the public an opportunity to know of her rare ability. A concert was given at Adrian recently, in which the Press compliments her as follows:

Miss Gay Lewis, pianist, again illustrated her happy talent as a finished accompanist and her impromptu from Shubert, given toward the close of the program, proved a triumphant testimonial to her superior merit as an instrumentalist.

King, the secretary of the R. R. Passenger Agents Association, at his office in the Adams Building, Chicago, Ill. Prof. Skinner goes to Brooklyn today to give the band in that village a music lesson.

Adam Dutcher one of Tecumseh's early setlers died in Addison at the age of 110, this morning.

This from an exchange we heartily endorse: The person who furnishes items to a newspaper is always a valuable friend to the editor. Many persons hesitate about sending personal notes to a newspaper regarding themselves, lest the newspaper man should think them too anxious to see their names in print. He will think nothing of the kind, but on the contrary will be glad to get such notes. Many seemingly unimportant items, when printed, are news to a large number of readers.

Lenawee county, Michigan, has a co-operative telegraph line which began by two farmers connecting their houses by wire, and which has extended until now it has sixty-five miles of wire and ninety offices, two-thirds of which are farm houses, and others in stores where farmers trade. Every farmer is his own operator, battery man and line repairer, and can use the line as much as he pleases. They communicate with each other, give orders to stores, and receive early information of important news over the wire. One farmer had his life saved by it. He took poison by accident, and there being no doctor within several miles, he telegraphed to the nearest drug store and one was sent to him.—Brooklyn Exponent.

WIDE AWAKE for March has seve a features appropriate to the Inauguration month: a charming adventure story, "How Nat Saw the Inauguration," relating to what befell a little fellow who walked into town from Alexandria to see President Cleveland take the oath of office four years ago; a reminiscence of the Harrison campaign of 1840, and a pretty little tale about Mrs. Harrison when she was a school-girl—these last two are in the department of "Men and Things." The department of "Men and Things" is very full and rich in ancedotes, and pithy talks. Wide Awake is $2.40 per year. D. Lothrop Company, Publishers, Boston.

The following appeared in the Detroit Free Press of last Thursday.

B J. Garlinghouse, the proprietor of the Lilly House at Tecumseh, was at the Plankinton yesterday. "I came over with the Adrian Masons, who came in to visit Zion Lodge of this city," he said. "Tecumseh is a quiet little town, and was never so torn up as it was by the Silvers tragedy. That is still as deep a mystery as ever. I knew the family well, and they were excellent people. Not a word was ever whispered against Frank Silvers until after the tragedy.

"A thing I have noticed at Tecumseh is that about election time the Republicans seem to consider it a sort of painful duty to take their party organ, the Tribune, but just as soon as the campaign is over they drop it and go back to the Free Press, which they read to get the news."

OBITUARY—JAMES MOIR.

The subject of this humble tribute was born at Montrose, Scotland, in the year 1846. At the age of seven years he emigrated with his parents from his native isle to London, Ontario, and after a brief residence there came to Detroit, which city was the home of the family for several years. In the year 1867 he took up his abode in Tecumseh, and he has resided here continuously since that date. He was married in November 1880 to Miss Sholes. His domestic life since the marriage has been a peculiarly happy one, and the union has been blessed with three children. He was for a long time an active member of Co C. Mich State troops. He was also a member of the Royal Templars Lodge and was connected with the Knights of Labor. He served two years with much credit as marshal of the village of Tecumseh. He was frequently called to official position in these different organizations and always performed the duties devolving upon him with singular fidelity. His services in some position of trust and honor were always in demand. As a husband and father he was kind hearted affectionate and faithful, as a neighbor and companion he was ever true, as a citizen he was honored and esteemed by all. The little family circle of which he was the head is sadly broken by his death. A wife and three young children, an aged mother, one brother and one sister will mourn over their mutual bereavement and will receive the heartfelt sympathy of all who knew what a brave, true man James Moir was.

The funeral obsequies were held at the family residence on Tuesday afternoon. Rev. J. M. Getchell delivered a brief address of comfort to the mourners. Co. C. and the Knights of Labor attended in a body and acted as an escort to the procession, which accompanied his remains to the grave. The death of a strong, healthy man in the prime of life and vigorous manhood, is not only a domestic affliction but a public misfortune as well. Men of his sterling integrity, industry and honor are too few in number here on earth; they are missed and mourned when they die.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

At a special meeting of L. A. No. 8081, K. of L., held March 11th, 1889, the following resolutions were adopted:—

Whereas, it has pleased the Great Master of the Universe to remove from our midst our late brother, James Moir, and whereas, the intimate relation held by our deceased brother with the members of this assembly, render it proper that we should place on our record our appreciation of his services as a Knight of Labor and his merit as a man.

Therefore be it resolved. That while we bow with humble submission to the will of the Great Masterwe do not the less mourn for our brother who has been called to lay down his implements on earth.

Resolved. That in the death of James Moir, this assembly loses a brother who was always prompt to advance the interest of the laborer and who was always wise in his council and fearless in action, an honest and upright man, whose virtues endeared him not only to the assembly, but to all his fellow citizens.

Resolved. That this assembly tender its heartfelt sympathy to the family and relatives of our deceased brother in their sad affliction.

Resolved. That in manifestation of our sympathy we attend his funeral in a body, that our charter be draped in mourning for thirty days, and that the above resolutions be placed on the records of assembly, and published in the village papers and the Advance (published in Detroit), also that a copy of the same be presented to the widow of the deceased.

THE LAST LETTER.

Long years within its sepulcher
Of faintly scented cedar
Has lain this letter dear to her
Who was its constant reader;
The postmark on the envelope
Sufficed the date to give her,
And told the birth of patient hope
That managed to outlive her.

How often to this treasure box,
Tears in her eyes' soft fringes,
She came with key, and turned the locks,
And on its brazen hinges
Swung back the quaintly figured lid
And raised a sandal cover,
Disclosing, under trinkets hid,
This message from her lover.

Then lifting it as 'twere a child,
Her hand awhile caressed it
Ere to the lips that sadly smiled
Time and again she pressed it;
Then drew the small inclosure out
And smoothed the wrinkled paper,
Lest any line should leave a doubt
Or any word escape her.

Still held the olden charm its place
Amid the tender phrases—
Time seemed unwilling to efface
The love pervaded praises;
And though a thousand lovers might
Have matched them all for passion,
A poet were inspired to write
In their unstudied fashion.

From "Darling" slowly, word by word,
She read the tear stained treasure;
The mists by which her eyes were blurred
Grew out of pain and pleasure;
But when she reached that cherished name,
And saw the last leave taking,
The mist a storm of grief became,
Her very heart was breaking!

I put it back—this old time note,
Which seems like sorrow's leaven—
For she who read, and he who wrote,
Please God, are now in heaven.
If lovers of today could win
Such love as won this letter,
The world about us would begin
To gladden and grow better.

—Frank Dempster Sherman in Century.

MR. MAX.

It is like heaven to Greta, this quiet and rest with the dear Frau Merz and all the children, though you or I could see neither among that noisy crew of six—four big boys, then Linchen and Hede, all to be washed, dressed, mended for and taught. But Greta loves children, and then there is Mr. Max.

Mr. Max is Frau Merz's brother, a big yellow haired giant, broad shouldered and kind, who frowns on the children when their spirits grow too high, threatens to lock them up in his big press and call ogres to eat them; who is never too busy to set an easy chair for Greta, pass her the knitting that is always at hand, and smooth all the rough places, till after a while it becomes second nature for Greta to turn to Mr. Max when she wants anything, and again when she gets it.

Frau Merz smiles but says nothing. Greta is a dear, love worthy girl, and will make Max a good wife. It had been a cause for dread that he might love some different girl, who would take him away and break up the sweet home life. Greta is already one of them, and when Max returns from America there will be a quiet wedding, the young people will settle down near them and all will go on as before.

So it is with a pleased, satisfied smile that Frau Merz greets her brother as he runs up her steps the day before he sails, intent on securing his bride. He tells her she has drawn a pretty picture, but one not easy to paint. The little Greta may refuse him.

Refuse him! refuse Mr. Max! Then the ungrateful little coquette shall go about her business and the dear children grow up dunces! As if such husbands grew on every bush for a little governess to pick—and, much more, till the swallows fly from the windows in terror.

They fly back the next morning to help say good-by to the traveler and see Frau Merz with her arm round Greta's waist—Greta, who is trying to look unhappy, like a well regulated maiden parting from her betrothed. Yes, her betrothed, for there had been a half hour in the schoolroom last night, at the end of which Greta found Max's ring on her finger and his kiss on her lips.

And now Frau Merz is promising to keep the little bride safely till he can return and claim her, and all the while Greta is perfectly sure she does not love Mr. Max half as much as he does her and that she will chiefly miss him when the children are unmanageable.

Frau Merz is very tearful for many days after Max's departure, and often does Greta in her own heart congratulate herself that she does not love Max. Why, she would be worn thin if she laid awake worrying over every wind that blew, and wondering if the ship had not met an iceberg and been wrecked. She never lost a night's sleep—not she. It will be time enough to think about Max when she marries him, as of course she intends to do, but for the present, she is not in love with him, and she is glad of it.

And now he is coming home, and the bride is thinking little of her husband, and much of her pretty clothes, and house linen. Frau Merz has been more than kind; but the generous gifts have been given with a wonder [illegible] so much is said of "my house," and so little of "my husband," and just when the thought has made her thoroughly uncomfortable, and disposed to be short with Greta, comes word that the vessel has gone down in sight of land, with all on board.

* * * * * * *

No! that is not the little widowed bride whose sobs are so heartrending. It is Frau Merz, and she is crying her heart out on Greta's shoulder; she is telling every one what a dear brother he was.

"Yes, and you," she says, "have not shed a tear! you did not love him, my poor dead brother!"

"No, I do not love him," says Greta, and goes quietly from the room. Quietly from the room, and quietly into her own, quietly closes the door, looks around, sits quietly down in her arm chair. Max gave her the chair; she must often be tired after teaching. His thoughtfulness was always first for her. In her own home she will have the right to be first. Their own home! Dear heaven! there will be no home —— She sees Max the day he sailed; she hears him say "Good-by, little wife! when I come again I will take you for my own, and we will never be separated again" —— Life with Max, his strong arm between her and every trial! Life alone, to battle for herself against the world, Max's tender admiration of all her hands have done—a stranger's, not Max's kisses.

If Frau Merz could see Greta now. She is face down on the little white bed and her sobs are choking. There is no use living any more; she must be alone all her life. She would have been so proud of Max, his home would have been all that he looked for, and she so true a wife. He would have been so glad to come to her when the day was over; she could see the cozy room in which she would wait for him. She would have on a soft, warm dress, made as he loved, to show her white throat, and he would take her in his arms, hold her close and tell her his life is complete—and, as the years go on, and they stand hand in hand by a cradle —— Oh! it is a girl's happy picture, but drawn on a slate, and a sponge has been passed over it, leaving the slate blank, and wet, so that no other picture can be drawn there. Greta knows her own heart now, and it is desolate.

There are days to be lived through before forgetfulness can come, days that are only miserable intervals between wretched nights, when Greta goes over and over in her mind the past year, and tries to hold on to the happy memories that will slip away from her as sand runs through the fingers.

So the spring time comes. It has been only two months since Max was lost, but oh! how long to Greta! Frau Merz soon finds out how it is with the girl, and every day the two grow more to each other. She begins to take comfort in her children, plans for their summer, and takes some of the good of life. Not so with Greta! there is always an ache at her heart, and a mist over her sunshine. She is in very truth a widow.

One day she is sitting alone (Greta loves to sit alone now, she can better think of Max). There is a sound of feet in the hall, a rush, a cry from Frau Merz, and her Max is at her side—her Max, who was picked up after the wreck by a whaling ship and carried half around the world—her Max, who missed her so, and now holds her close as if he would make up for all he had lost.

And Greta's heart—that learned to know itself only when broken? The healing is all done before the physician has said ever a word.—Translated for Current Literature from the Berlin Tagblatt by Miss J. M. Burgoyne.

The Old Fugitive Law.

The close of the last session of the Second congress on March 3, 1793, recalls an important act of that body which is little remembered. The Second congress enacted the first fugitive slave law, which originated in the senate and was passed by the house without debate. This statute directed that in case of the escape from any state or territory of any person held to service or labor that the master, agent or attorney of the owner might seize the person held to such service and take him before the United States judge or local magistrate, and on proof, oral or by affidavit, that such person was a fugitive from service the judge or magistrate was directed to grant a certificate to that effect, which certificate should be sufficient for the removal of the fugitive to his former owner. To aid in the escape of a fugitive slave rendered the party liable to a fine of $500. Several northern states soon enacted laws forbidding local magistrates to execute the Federal act, which consequently became a dead letter until its revival in the famous fugitive slave law of 1850.—Philadelphia Times.

Refused Presidents.

In a little village some twelve miles distant from Cleveland, O., there lived, some thirty years ago, two very attractive girls. To one of these President Hayes became a suitor, but the parents of the young lady vigorously opposed the courtship on the ground that young Hayes was poor, and gave evidence of hardly sufficient ability to warrant risking their daughter's future. The match was broken off and the lady is today married and well known in Cleveland society. The other young lady had received many attentions from young Garfield, and was disposed to reciprocate them. Her parents, however, objected to their intimacy, giving as a reason for their opposition the poverty of Garfield and the anything but bright prospects of his future. The chief coincidence of these courtships consists in the fact that Bedford, where both these young ladies lived, contained at the time less than 500 inhabitants, and both refused two future presidents of the United States because of their poverty.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Education and Invention.

Inventors have generally been led to their important tasks by chance, and have picked up their training by the way. Here and there may be a mute and glorious Milton whose soul has never been aroused by educative influence, but for each great poet who has never learned to sing there are probably scores of men as able as Watt, Naymith or Edison who have not been aroused to their inventive powers. It therefore seems very desirable that manual training should be made to go with such headwork as will serve to stimulate the inventive spirit of our youth. The means of carrying out such a project for arousing the inventive capacities of young men and women will need to be created. It is easy, however, to see the way to a plan in which, as soon as the student has compassed a sense of the natural powers in their simpler relations, he may be set to work seeking to solve problems which demand inventive power for their solution.—Boston Herald.

A young man, looking into the grave in which the mortal remains of his father were being covered from human sight said: "I shall never think of my father being there." That was a good thought. We do not bury the essential part of humanity. That survives and lives elsewhere as really as it once lived in the body.—Independent.

A GREAT MAGAZINE.

The Century for 1889.

"THE question has often been asked, "to what does The Century owe its great circulation?" The Christian Union once answered this by the statement that "it has been fairly won, not by advertising schemes, but by the excellence which characterizes it in every department." In their announcements for the coming year the publishers state that it has always been their desire to make The Century the one indispensable periodical of its class, so that whatever other publication might be desirable in the family, The Century could not be neglected by those who wish to keep abreast of the times in all matters pertaining to culture. And the unprecedented circulation of the magazine would seem to be the response of the public to this intention.

With the November number The Century begins its thirty-seventh volume. Two great features of the magazine which are to continue throughout the new volume are already well known to the public, the Lincoln history and the papers on "Siberia and the Exile System." The first of these, written by Messrs. Nicolay and Hay, President Lincoln's private secretaries, contains the inside histo of the dark days of the war, as seen from the White House.

THE SIBERIAN PAPERS,

by George Kennan, are attracting the attention of the civilized world. The Chicago Tribune says that "no other magazine articles printed in the English language just now touch upon a subject which so vitally interests all thoughtful people in Europe and America and Asia." As is already known, copies of The Century entering Russia have these articles torn out by the customs officials on the frontier.

DURING 1889

The Century will publish the most important art feature that has yet found place in its pages. It is the result of four years' work of Mr. Timothy Cole, the leading magazine engraver of the world, in the galleries of Europe, engraving from the originals the greatest pictures by the old masters. A series of papers on Ireland, its customs, landscapes, etc., will appear, and there are to be illustrated articles on Bible scenes, treating especially the subjects of the International Sunday-School Lessons. George W. Cable will write "Strange, True Stories of Louisiana." There will be novelettes and short stories by leading writers, occasional articles on war subjects (supplemental to the famous "War Papers" by General Grant and others, which have been appearing in The Century), etc., etc.

The Century costs four dollars a year, and it is published by The Century Co., of New York, who will send a copy of the full prospectus to any one on request.

We notice a new departure in the treatment of disease that promises to revolutionize the medicine business. It consists in the collection of the species used by noted specialists of Europe and America, and bringing them within the reach of all. For instance, the treatment pursued by special physicians who treat indigestion, stomach and liver troubles only, was obtained and preferred. The treatments of other physicians celebrated for curing catarrh, were procured, and so on till these incomparable cures now include diseases of the lungs, kidneys, female weakness, rheumatism, nervous debility, and piles. Originated and used by specialists, being a positive cure for each disease, these preparations are the best remedies procurable. We advise all to send three two cent stamps to the Chase Medical Specialty Co., 179 West Adams St., Chicago, Ill., and receive by return mail their interesting hand book.

AS A LITTLE CHILD.

LESSON XI., FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, MARCH 17.

Text of the Lesson, Mark x. 13-32. Commit Verses 31, 32—Golden Text, Mark x. 14. Commentary by Rev. D. W. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

33. "And He came to Capernaum." He had shown them His power and glory on the mount of transfiguration, thus assuring the three who were with Him that, though now despised and rejected, He was not merely the lowly man. He appeared to be, but also the true Son of God as well as Son of Man, Israel's Messiah; and if they would be content to bear the cross with Him now, they would in due time share His glory. When they descended from the mount, they found the man with the demon possessed son whom the other disciples had tried in vain to heal, and as Jesus cast out the demon He told the disciples that their failure was due to unbelief, but at the same time added that "this kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting." (Matt. xvii. 21). He then passed through Galilee teaching the disciples by the way and for the second time plainly foretold His sufferings, death and resurrection (verses 30-32), but they understood not, for they had other thoughts in their minds and looked for a different result. How many Christians are even now in the dark concerning things that are coming, because they have other thoughts than God's in their minds, and are not simply and believingly subject to His word. One result of their unbelief was that instead of being in fellowship and sympathy with Him as He journeyed to the cross, they were thinking and talking of their own individual interests and reasoning among themselves as to who should be the greatest in the kingdom which they thought was then close at hand. (Luke ix. 46.)

34. "By the way they had disputed among themselves who should be the greatest." They had not talked so He could hear, but He had perceived the thought of their hearts (Luke ix. 47), as we journey on in our church and Sunday school work, and ordinary daily life He is always perceiving the thoughts of our hearts, and it is not true that instead of seeing there a whole hearted sympathy with Him in His great aim to have the Gospel preached to every creature, He often sees our aim to be that we may have the finest church building, or largest congregation, most successful Sunday school, or in some way the praise of men rather than His approval. Why cannot our aim be that of Paul "that Christ may be magnified in our bodies, whether by life or by death;" "making ourselves all things to all men that we may by all means save some." (Phil. i. 20, 1 Cor. ix. 22.) To this end let us seek Him with the whole heart, remembering that He searcheth all hearts and understandeth all the imaginations of the thoughts. (I Chron. xxviii. 9.)

35. "If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all and servant of all." So again in Chap. x. 43-45 where He repeats the same teaching, adding that He Himself as Son of Man came not to be ministered unto but to minister, and to give His life a ransom for many. The word of the Lord to Baruch through Jeremiah was "Seekest thou great things for thyself? Seek them not." (Jer. xlv. 5.) And the word of the Lord to us today does not vary from that, for if the Lord Jesus sought not His own glory while here in his humiliation, surely no true follower of His should seek honor or glory for its own sake in a world that is at enmity with God. One reason why the disciples were disputing as to who should be the greatest, was their not understanding the object of Christ's first coming to suffer, the just for the unjust, to be cut off and have nothing (Isa. liii. 5; Dan. ix. 26); and one reason why there is so much emulation and strife among churches and Christians now is because they do not see clearly their position in this world and their relation to it and to Christ, and have not enough of His spirit who was meek and lowly in heart and humbled Himself even unto death.

36. "He took a child and set him in the midst of them." In our last lesson, which was much later than this in point of time, He took infants in His arms and taught that the kingdom must be received as a little child, for otherwise it could not be entered; and that to come to Him we must come in entire helplessness and dependence, simply believing His word, bringing nothing of our own, but receiving all from Him as an unmerited gift.

37. "Whosoever shall receive one of such children in My name, receiveth Me, and whosoever shall receive Me, receiveth not Me, but Him that sent Me." Not many workers for Christ think it so great or important to work among the children and gather them in as to reach the older ones; and not many think it as great a work to reach the poor of this world who cannot do much to support the church and have apparently nothing but souls to be saved, as to reach the more well to do people who can be of some service to the church and help in so many ways; nice families (?) with whom we can associate, you know, and who are really influential (?) people.

38. "We forbade him, because he followeth not us." What a wretched, God dishonoring firm this "We, Us & Co." certainly is, and because this one who cast out devils in Jesus' name was not of the company of the apostles, he must therefore stop his good work if John knows anything about it; and he thinks he does.

39. "Jesus said, Forbid him not." Blessed Master, Great Head of the church, we thank Thee that in reference to the little children Thou didst say, "Forbid them not;" and in reference to this worker outside the apostolic company Thou didst say, "Forbid him not."

40. "He that is not against us is on our part." This word looked at in the light of that previous word, "He that is not with Me is against Me, and he that gathereth not with Me scattereth abroad" (Matt. xii. 30), certainly cannot be held to teach that if a man is not openly against Christ therefore he is for Him. The case in question was that of a man actually working and doing good in the Name of Christ, and Jesus says of him, he is not against us, even if he is not in our company, therefore, forbid him not.

41. "Whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in My name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward." Eternal life is the gift of God, and must be received as a helpless child receives what is given to it; salvation is in every case "to him that worketh not, but believeth" (Rom. iv. 5); then being saved, we are patiently, meekly and lovingly to work out in our daily life the salvation which we have thus freely received, not relying upon, nor seeking the favor of men, but seeking with the whole heart the salvation of souls, valuing the soul of a little child, or the poorest of earth's children, as much as the soul of the wealthiest of earth's great ones, and to this end ready to work with any who love the Lord Jesus, or at least put no hindrance before them, even though their methods be different from ours.

42. "Whosoever shall offend one of these little ones * * *." Three times in the rest of this chapter He speaks of the fire of hell as the awful alternative if any are found who persist in going against Him or His little ones, who represent Him.

The City Away Out on the Sunset Border

GETS EXCITED RATHER TOO SUDDEN.

A Probable Stock-Jobbing Report That Is Utterly Discredited at Washington Works Up the People of the Pacific Metropolis—What Is Said About That Famous Sensation at the Navy Department—Patriotic Fierry in a Flitburg Theatre.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 11.—The excitement in this city Saturday over the rumors of the sinking of the United States man-of-war Nipsic was intense. It could not have been greater if the Breslau dispatch published a few days ago stating that the Nipsic had been blown up by a torpedo directed at it by the German man-of-war Olga, had been fully confirmed. All sorts of rumors were in circulation. One report was that the naval authorities at Mare island had received news confirming the sinking of the Nipsic, and this was followed by another report that the American mail steamer Alameda, of the Oceanic company had been seized. The statement was also made that a telegram had been received at the Union Iron works of this city from the secretary of the navy inquiring as to how soon the cruiser Charleston could be placed in readiness for guns.

Upon the strength of these rumors, and the further statement that the Southern Pacific company had been notified to be prepared to handle the Charleston's guns and naval stores, bulletins were displayed in front of the newspaper offices stating that private advices had been received confirming the sinking of the American man-of-war Nipsic. The bulletins were eagerly read and the news spread like lightning. In a short time tremendous crowds besieged the newspaper offices clamoring for details.

In the absence of any definite information the belief rapidly gained ground that the Nipsic had certainly been blown up by the German war vessel. Extra editions of the papers were issued up to a late hour, but the news contained therein was of such meagerness that it wholly failed to satisfy the demands of the public or definitely dispose of the fate of the American vessel. The crowds lingered around the newspaper offices late into the night. The excitement, however, somewhat subsided when bulletins denying the capture of the Alameda were displayed, and stating that she had arrived at Sydney. The other reports were just as false as that about the Alameda.

Samoan advices up to March 1 will reach here by the steamship Zealandia, which is due at this port Saturday next, and no definite information from these islands is expected in the meantime unless by cable from Auckland.

The California Demokrat, leading German paper of this city, declared in editorial that Germans must do one of two things if war ensued, either rally round the stars and stripes or go back to Germany, and added: "And since we have come here to stay, we will stand and fall by our flag; our country, right or wrong."

LATEST—None of the alarming rumors about events in Samoan have been confirmed, and the excitement caused by them has abated. The Aita urges that the Berlin conference set down for the 13th inst., should be deferred until the arrival here on the 16th of the steamer Zealandia from Auckland, which may bring important news.

NEW YORK, March 11.—A special to The Herald from San Francisco says: It is stated that the first Breslau cablegram, which originated the present Nipsic agitation, was sent from this city. The story goes that one of the passengers who came upon the Mariposa brought news of an important character, commercially, relative to the Samoan troubles, to a local German mercantile house. This house, for the purpose of influencing trade in a certain channel, cabled the story to its Breslau correspondent with instructions to give it wide circulation. The present agitation was the result. This statement of the case received credence among down-town merchants to-day [Saturday] when many widely conflicting reports were in circulation.

WASHINGTON SCOUTS THE RUMOR.

The Navy Department Officials Say It Must Be False.

WASHINGTON CITY, March 11.—Commodore Walker, who was acting secretary of the navy Saturday, said that the San Francisco dispatch about the sinking of the Nipsic in Samoan waters must be false. The navy department, he said, has received no advices whatever about the alleged naval combat, and advices from Auckland, New Zealand, the nearest telegraph station to Samoa, would surely reach the department at Washington sooner than San Francisco. A naval officer is stationed at Auckland, with instructions to telegraph any important occurrences in Samoa, and the commodore feels confident that had any such thing happened as the sinking of the Nipsic, this officer would have promptly notified the department here.

Commodore Walker, as well as state department officials generally, discredit the story of the sinking of the Nipsic. As to the report that the United States war vessel Charleston has been ordered in immediate readiness for sea the commodore says it is absolutely false, and that no such orders have been sent from the department.

EXCITEMENT AT PITTSBURG.

A Concert Audience Hisses the German Flag.

PITTSBURG, March 11.—There was a lively time at the Academy of Music, Saturday night, all on account of Samoa. During the evening's performance the "Song of All Nations" was sung. All went on smoothly until the part referring to Germany was reached. At this point a verse of the "Die Wacht Am Rhein" is rendered by a young lady, the singer waving two German flags above her head. She had hardly got started when the audience hissed. Two gentlemen rose to their feet and objected to the display of the German flag, and one of them shouted to "bring on the good old American flag." Another of the audience expostulated with him and a fight followed. The objector to the German flag struck the man who tried to check him in the face. The offending anti-Germans were arrested. At the station-house they gave their names as W. P. Johnston and Dr. Engis. Each put up a forfeit for appearance.

Killed Two Men and Wrecked the Mill.

ST. LOUIS, MO., March 11.—The boilers in the Victoria Flouring mills, at Second and Brooklyn streets, exploded at 5 o'clock yesterday morning, killing Pat McMahon, the fireman, and Pat Brown, a coal passer. Head Miller Fishbeck was badly scalded about the face and arms. The mill, which has a capacity of 800 barrels of flour a day, was almost totally destroyed.

St. Nicholas for 1889.

PEOPLE who have the idea that St. Nicholas Magazine is only for little children should look over the prospectus of that magazine for 1889, and they will discover that it is for children of all ages, "from five to eighty-five," as some one recently said of it. Indeed, while St. Nicholas is designed for girls and boys, it might almost be called a "family magazine," for the grown-up members of a household will find much to interest them in every number.

The editor, Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, calls the next volume an "all-round-the-world year," because it is to contain so many illustrated papers about the world in general—not dry geographical papers, but stories and sketches and tales of travel and adventure, by land and sea—and all illustrated by the best artists. The features will include a serial story, "How We Made the Farthest North," by Gen. A. W. Greely, the well-known commander of the Greely Expedition; a serial about Canada, by Mrs. Catherwood, who is writing a serial story for The Century this year; "Indians of the Amazon," by Mrs. Frank R. Stockton. There are many papers about Europe, including a Christmas story of life in Norway, by H. H. Boyesen; articles on Holland and the Dutch, by Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge; "The Queen's Navy," by Lieut. F. Harrison Smith, R. N., with illustrations of many of England's finest war ships; "The Winchester School," illustrated by Joseph Pennell; "English Railway Trains," by Wm. H. Rideing, etc., etc. The French papers include "Ferdinand de Lesseps and his two Ship Canals," and there are several interesting contributions on German, Italian and Russian subjects.

Under "Asia," comes "Boys and Girls in China," by Yan Phou Lee (a recent graduate of Yale); "Home Life in the East," by Mrs. Holman Hunt, and a number of papers about Japan. Under "Africa" there is a sketch of Henry M. Stanley, by Noah Brooks, and several stories about Egypt. Australia is not forgotten, nor the islands of the sea, and there are even to be stories of under the sea.

Of course the bulk of the contents will relate to American subjects, as usual. Mrs. Burnett, the author of "Little Lord Fauntleroy," contributes a story of New York called "Little Saint Elizabeth." there will be papers describing how the government offices are conducted, papers about athletics, amateur photography, etc. The full prospectus will be sent to any one who wishes to see by the publishers, The Century Co., of New York.

The Graphic recently said of St. Nicholas, the family without it is only half-blessed."

HOW CAN PARENTS

allow their children to cough and strain and cough and calmly say: "Oh! it is only a little cold," and keep giving them cheap and dangerous medicines, until they are down with lung fever or consumption, when they can be so easily relieved by BEGGS' CHERRY COUGH SYRUP? When Spring Comes

This is the way a horse and a poor blanket look at the end of winter.

Why is it that of two horse blankets which look and feel equally well one won't wear at all, and the other wears well?

This 5/A Trade Mark shows why.

Horse Blankets which are strong and have a reputation are always imitated in poor qualities which look like them, but having fewer warp threads are not as strong.

Some dealers buy these poor imitations for a few cents less and by saying they are "just as good," sell them at the same price as the strong blankets to parties who do not know the difference.

You cannot tell whether horse blankets are strong by the look or feel, as the warp threads do not show on the face. How then are you to know?

In order that you can tell a strong blanket from a weak one, the manufacturer of 5/A Horse Blankets sews the above 5/A Trade Mark inside of each blanket. This is a guarantee that it is the strongest blanket made for the money and will wear well.

Many poor imitations have been sold as 5/A blankets. Remember none are genuine unless the 5/A Trade Mark is sewed inside.

WHAT ON EARTH

Is the reason people will not, can not, or do not see any difference in cheap nostrums put up by Cheap John houses or irresponsible parties at enormous profits, rather than take a medicine of world wide reputation and one that is giving universal satisfaction at equal price? No medicine in the world is giving such unparalleled satisfaction for purifying the blood as BEGGS' BLOOD PURIFIER & BLOOD MAKER, and every bottle that does not do its work will cost you nothing.

LONG LIFE.

There is nothing in the world more generally desired than long life, yet the majority of people put off caring for their health—not because they are really careless, but because we live our lives at such a pace we have not time to give the subject sufficient thought until we recive a reminder in the shape of a severe illness.

Then, too, we are constantly bewildered by the various schools of medicine, and the physicians who represent them, and often blunder in our choice of a doctor.

If people only knew that the very best health-keeper, life-preserver, and disease-preventer that has yet been discovered, is simered down into a concentrated and very palatable form in the shape of New Style Pleasant Taste Vinegar Bitters, they would not hesitate a moment to try it.

But they do not know. How can they know, when so many not only worthless, but positively injurious drugs are constantly flooding the market under various names and guises, that the New Style Vinegar Bitters is as bad as any of them.

They do not know, of course, unless they have courage to try the New Style. It straightens out a tangled-up system in a very short while, and those who buy it once buy it always.

Why dont you try it, reader? It is sent out by a responsible house, and is exactly as represented. It costs but one dollar for a very large bottle. Try it at once and you will never be so glad of anything in your life. Your druggists may not have it, but he will order it for you. Be sure it says New Style Pleasant Taste on carton and bottle before you take it. Try it, and you will feel happier than if you had found a gold mine—of health.

CITIZENS WHO HAVE DRAWN PRIZES

In the Mind of the Looker On at the National Capital—Senator Farwell's "Business Scheme"—Death of Congressman Townshend and a Sketch of His Life—Mrs. Harrison's Note of Condolence—An Official Head Demanded.

WASHINGTON CITY, March 11.—A falling off that was noticeable in the crowds of office seekers Saturday was probably due in a measure to the notice given by the heads of all the departments that the vacancies would not be filled until there was time for examining the papers of applicants.

The cabinet was in session an hour and a half Saturday, but beyond the fact that it was agreed to meet at the pleasure of the president for the present, nothing of what was done has transpired. The White House was comparatively quiet during the afternoon, and at night the president had his first opportunity to spend a few hours with his family.

The candidates for public printer are all well backed by their states, and the papers of these are in the president's hands—Helms, Hart, and Donath. The president has stated very clearly that he will make his selection of public printer not on a man's political strength, but on his merits as a business man and a printer. Mr. Hart's chances seem to be spoiled by this declaration, because his friends do not claim that he is possessed of technical skill. Mr. Donath's friends, on the other hand, are confident that if ability and experience are the essential requisites their man will get the place. Meredith and Holloway, the Illinois and Indiana candidates, are not taken into account, however, in this estimate of probabilities, and their claims will be urged with great vigor.

The correspondent of The New York Sun telegraphs his paper that the New York Republican leaders have agreed upon Gen. George S. Batchellor, of Saratoga, for assistant secretary of the treasury, and that he will be appointed. Charles E. Coon, who wanted this place, is to get another one in the same department, and the other assistant secretary will be Col. Tichenor, of Illinois, and this, The Sun man says, does not please the Illinois politicians, because it bars their candidates for other offices, among them Col. Clark E. Carr, who wanted to be first assistant postmaster-general, which, it is reported, is to go to an Ohio man. Whitfield, formerly postmaster of Cincinnati. It is generally believed that Walker Blaine will be nominated for first assistant secretary of state.

New York, according to this correspondent, is to be pretty well fixed abroad. Whitelaw Reid is slated for England, Fred Grant for China, and Allen Thorndyke Rice for Germany. William Walter Phelps is to get the French mission.

Senator Farwell, of Illinois, has a plan which he calls a "business scheme" for the disposition of the offices. In brief it is for the congressional delegations in the Republican states, including of course the senators, to make up a list of the best men for the offices, those states having no representation in the cabinet to have all the places outside of the departments, which latter are to go the states that have the cabinet. The Democratic states are to have nothing except the local offices. These lists are to be sent to the president with the request to appoint all or as many of the men named as he can. This, the senator claims, would save the president a heap of trouble and put the selections in the hands of those who would be most competent to do the work. There is a good deal of opposition to the plan, as it is claimed that it gives no encouragement to the party in Democratic states. Regarding the Chicago postoffice Farwell said Newberry was confirmed with the understanding that he was to send in his resignation when the senator asked for it, and he has not done that yet.

Another part of Farwell's plan is to "abolish those schoolmasters, the civil-service commissioners," and he also wants to relieve the president of the hand shaking that he now has to undergo.

Minnesota people are looking for several good positions. Among them may be mentioned Rev. Dr. Jackson (colored), of St. Paul, who wants to be minister to Hayti; William G. Leduc, the old ex-commissioner of agriculture, who would like to be assistant secretary of agriculture; R. F. Crowell, who desires to be sixth auditor; W. D. Estes, who thinks a South American consulate is just what he needs; H. G. Jertson and Baron Von Rosdind, who want consulates.

Col. Elliott F. Shepard, of New York, expects, if he can get it without upsetting Whitelaw Reid's plans, to represent the United States at Berlin.

The Iowa delegation has, so it is stated, selected and presented to the president the following names: Gen. Tuttle, for commissioner of pensions; ex-Governor Stone, for commissioner of the general land office, and ex-Congressman Hepburn, for commissioner of patents.

President and Mrs. Harrison, Russell Harrison and his wife, and Mrs. Robert McKee, attended divine service at Dr. Hamlin's church on Connecticut avenue yesterday afternoon. The president and his folks came quietly and unannounced; and as their presence was unexpected, attracted but little attention during the service.

R. W. TOWNSHEND DEAD

The Illinois Congressman Succumbs to the Great Leveler.

WASHINGTON CITY, March 11.—The national flag flies at half mast over the capitol out of respect to the memory of Congressman R. W. Townshend, of Illinois, who died here Saturday morning at 11:45 o'clock. Mr. Townshend was born but a few miles from this city of a family which united Virginia and Maryland blood of the best strains. He was educated in Washington, and while yet a youth was employed as a clerk in one of the principal book stores, where he could sometimes gratify his desire for reading and become acquainted with many of the public men who frequented the place. He attracted their attention as a remarkably bright boy by his great fondness for political discussion. It is related of him that he frequently drew into political controversy a much older clerk named Backham, and that the latter, wearied of his discussions with young Townshend, said one day: "It makes no difference what you say, Dick Townshend, you're nothing but a boy, any way."

The boy Townshend replied: "I know I am only a boy, but I am going to be a congressman some day. Just you wait a few years and I will be getting $5,000 a year in that house on the hill while you are still clerking at a few dollars a week."

Young Townshend, in pursuance of his determination to become a congressman, obtained a page's position in the house. Here he attracted the attention of the Hon. Samuel S. Marshall, a Democratic congressman from Southern Illinois, who invited him to go west and read law in his office. This invitation was accepted, and young Townshend took up his residence at McLeansborough, Ills., where Judge Marshall resided. Here he studied law, at the same time assisting in the clerk's office of one of the courts. When scarcely of age he was selected court clerk.

After Mr. Townshend moved to Illinois he soon became popular in his neighborhood and entered public life. He was clerk of the circuit court of Hamilton county and prosecuting attorney for the Twelfth district. He was a member of the Democratic state central committee of Illinois for ten years, and was a delegate to the national Democratic convention at Baltimore in 1872. He served in the Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh, Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, and Fiftieth congresses, as a Democrat, and was re-elected to the Fifty-first.

Referring to criticisms upon himself for not having gone into the army during the war Mr. Townshend recently remarked plaintively: "Well, there were seven sons in my family. Three of my brothers went into the Union army, and three joined the Confederate service, and I remained in civil life to keep things even in the family."

Mr. Townshend was prominent and influential in congress and in the councils of his party during the whole of his public service, and held positions upon several of the most important committees, always discharging the duty assigned to him with fidelity and ability. His last position of responsibility, and a difficult one under the circumstance which existed in the last congress, was that of chairman of the committee on military affairs. He discharged its duties in a manner entirely satisfactory to his party friends, and won the esteem of every member of his committee.

Mr. Townshend died at his hotel in this city after an illness of one week. He attended a dinner party at the residence of Mr. Hubbard Friday, March 1, and contracted a severe cold which developed into acute pneumonia, and the best medical skill was unable to save his life on account of the structural weakness of his lungs and the debilitated condition of his system from too close application to his duties in congress, and overwork during the last few weeks of the session.

Mr. Townshend married Miss Augusta Pool, at Shawneetown, Ills., June 30, 1869, and his wife and two children survive him. He will be buried at Shawneetown, Ills., Wednesday afternoon. He was nearly 49 years old.

Mrs. Harrison sent the following note to Mrs. Townshend: "MY DEAR MRS. TOWNSHEND: I was very much shocked at the sudden death of your husband. Your grief is too sacred to approach with words. Accept these flowers with my heartfelt sympathy. The president desires to add his sympathy with mine. Sincerely yours, CARRIE S. HARRISON."

Dismissed for Bad Business Methods.

This action is the outcome of the investigation begun some time ago into the business methods pursued by those officials.

The President Swings the Axe.

WASHINGTON CITY, March 11.—Late Saturday afternoon Attorney General Miller telegraphed Mr. C. C. Watts, United States attorney, Charleston, W. Va., as follows: "I am instructed by the president that he would be glad to receive your resignation as the office of United States attorney for the state of West Virginia."

A JEALOUS HUSBAND'S DEED.

He Murders His Young Wife and Then Takes His Own Life.

TIFFIN, Ohio, March 8.—At Fostoria, fourteen miles west of here, Thursday night a terrible tragedy was enacted. A few weeks ago William Gessner, a glass worker of that place, had gone to Findlay to work, leaving his wife with her parents in Fostoria. Thursday night he suddenly appeared at the latter place, and, going to his wife's parents' home, called her to the door. He said something, and then she was heard to say "No." A second later a shot from a revolver was heard, and the young woman staggered back into the room with a bullet in her hip. Her husband followed her and shot her again in the neck, and she fell to the floor dying.

The husband turned and shot himself through the neck, falling dead on the steps. The whole affair did not last two minutes. The murdered woman was young and handsome, and no cause but jealousy is known for the terrible act. The whole town is torn up over the matter.

New Warships for Britain.

LONDON, March 9.—In the house of commons Thursday evening, Hamilton, first lord of the admiralty, said that all the war vessels now built would be supplied with guns by the end of 1889. It was proposed, he said, to build eight first-class men-of-war of 14,000 tons, two of 9,000 tons, nine first-class cruisers, twenty-nine smaller cruisers, four of the pandora type of cruisers and eighteen of the sharpshooter type of torpedo boats. Lord George said the total tonage of the proposed ships would be 318,000 and the total cost was estimated at £21,500,000 pounds. The proposals were criticised by Churchill and "Fighting Charley" Beresford, who thought the British naval force should be equal always to two of the other European powers.

To Observe Jefferson's Birthday.

NEW YORK, March 9.—Chauncey F. Black, president of the National Association of Democratic clubs, has issued a request to the societies under his jurisdiction to observe, with all honors, the birthday of Thomas Jefferson, April 1. He says: "The birth of Thomas Jefferson was an event of transcendent importance not only to Americans but to mankind. His influence in the severance of the colonies from the crown of England, in the formations of the institutions under which we now live was more decisive as well as more judicious than that of any other in the whole line of American patriots and statesmen.

Frightful Petroleum Explosion.

LONDON, March 9.—An Austrian ship laden with petroleum became ignited and exploded in the harbor of the French island of Bouc. Four of the crew were saved and nine perished. Two of the bodies were found, but the rest were blown in into atoms.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

The famous trotter Bell Boy, who was sold by S. A. Brown & Co., of Kalamazoo, to Kentucky parties for $31,000 about a year ago, has recently changed hands again, the consideration this time being $51,000. This is the largest price ever paid for a trotting horse in this country.

A couple of Muskegon lumbermen are said to own 2,000,000,000 feet of standing pine, not a tree of which grew in Michigan. One-half of the lot scents the balmy air of sunny Arkansas, while the balance wastes its fragrance on the frigid atmosphere of British Columbia.

A Montague "medium," while conjuring the departed spirits in the supposed interest of a client recently had an eye on the main chance, for when the said client came to pay his bill, he was minus $92 in cash. The "medium" is now doing six months at the Ionia prison.

The Michigan shingle manufacturers got their heads together at Grand Rapids on the 20th and decided that an advance in prices would be about the proper caper, so far as they were concerned. People who anticipate purchasing shingles this season can't lay in their stock too quickly if they desire to avoid the increased tariff.

At the recent session of the grand lodge of Michigan, Odd Fellows, G. W. Crouter, of Charlevoix, was elected grand master, and E. H. Whitney, of Lansing, secretary. The next session goes to Ionia.

Six hundred Escanaba folks turned out to see a couple of bullies pummel each other in what is generally known as a "prize fight". This is a pretty good world in which to live, though there's still some brutality left to be evoluted out of it.

A Bay City youth, who had just entered his teens, became possessed of an ardent desire to see the world and so struck out for himself. He finally brought up in Kentucky and secured a railway job by which to earn his bread and butter. But the work proved to be a tough task for the tender youngster, and now his ma has gone after the "kid" and will bring him home.

An Owosso concern recently received an order for 1,000 screen doors. This may account for the fineness of the snow of the late blizzard, which sifted its way into the smallest crevelce.

Lumber sales are active in the Saginaw valley and prices have a decidedly upward tendency.

A Decatur gentleman realized $1,600 from a 17-acre peppermint patch the season, and proposes to increase the area of his plant the coming spring.

Portland folks don't seem to be anxious to conceal the fact that they're harboring twenty-eight debating clubs this winter. But just think of the amount of jaw they involve.

An Imlay City bus driver left his team unhitched at the depot in that town and the nags took a little trip on their own account. Before the journey was complete the owner had a busted bus and two demoralized lady passengers on his hands, one with a broken leg and the other with a fractured arm. Carelessness seldom pays.

The home of Jack Coffin, a Rochester citizen, which had withstood the frosts of fifty-seven winters, was recently destroyed by fire.

Bay City folks feel quite provincial since a big wildcat was killed within their city limits.

Thomas O'Brien, a Bellaire boy, is a section foreman on the G. R. & I. road, and a neat, tidy one he is. For the past five years he's scooped in the annual prize offered by that company for the best kept section of track on its line.

M. Garland, a Bay City citizen, has an order from a Canadian firm for a marble conveyor, that's to be more than one-fifth of a mile in length. When completed, 'twill be the longest conveyor the world.

The Michigan Central freight house at Jackson was damaged $5,000 by fire on Feb. 24. The company will not go out of business, however, on that account.

The Sheffield car works, located at Three Rivers, had another narrow escape from being creamted the other night.

Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Collins, Royal Oak residents, were tipped out of their wagon because they got in the way of a D. & M. locomotive, and now they are going for the company with a $10,000 damage suit.

The F. & P. M. round-house at Evart, burned on Feb. 24th, badly damaging two freight engines. Loss, $2,500; insured.

The home of Ernest Young, of Ransom Station, near Battle Creek, burned on Feb. 24th. Two young children, aged 4 and 6 years respectively, were burned to death.

Owners of fast horses at Lansing are said to race 'em on the public streets of that city for money, the fleetest nag taking the cash.

Mrs. Margaret Rose died at Wheatland the other day at the advanced age of 104 years. She had survived three husbands, the first of whom was a soldier of the war of 1812.

Sand Beach folks are tickled because not a comic valentine got loose there this year.

Fowlerville is going to have a $10,000 woodenware factory if a cog doesn't slip and spoil the arrangements therefor.

The editors of the upper peninsula and northern Wisconsin formed a press association at Escanaba on the 26th. J. C. Van Duzen, of Escanaba, was chosen president and C. H. Kelsey, of Marquette, secretary.

Several prominent Michigan manufacturers will have their wares on exhibition at the world's exposition at Paris next summer.

Jackson folks rather suspect that the recent disastrous fires in that city were the work of fire-bugs. A sharp lookout is being kept up for a repetition of their incendiary work.

Northville has one hand on her pocketbook, with an eye wistfully squinting at a $25,000 waterworks outfit. As she's getting mighty thirsty, the money will probably have to go.

A. L. Smith, a Girard citizen, seems to have had more trouble about making up his mind than do some members of the Smith family. He recently married a Miss Paddock of that village, after having kept her company for the past twenty-one years.

An Alma preacher baptised a lot of folks by ducking them though a hole in the ice on a recent frosty day, and the parson and his new converts are having a tustle with pneumonia.

George Gorton, a Rochester citizen and soldier of the war 1812, is dead at the age of ninty-five years.

Michael Farrell, an Ada citizen, reared a family of children, all of whom were given a good "setting out" when they were married, in cash and land, and now in his old age, Michael finds himself deitute and none of the children will assist him. "How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is, to have a thankless child."

R. P. Gustin, the wholesale merchant who recently died at Bay City, is said to have carried $65,000 life insurance.

Big Rapids can have the Chippewa Valley railway by putting up $15,000, and the folks there are counting their cash and will make a decision before long.

The business portion of Lakeview was badly scorched on the night of Feb. 28, the aggregate loss ranging from $12,000 to $16,000. Insurance, less than $2,000.

The perils that surround the farmer boy are many and some of 'em are fatal ones, too. Richard O'Leary, a Genesee county lad of 15 summers, was buried beneath an overturned straw stack and has since died from his injuries.

Professor J. W. Langley, of the state university, and well known in scientific circles, is said to contemplate severing his connection with that institution. A Pittsburg firm offers him a $5,000 salary which may prove an irresistible attraction.

Bay City has one school teacher who doesn't lack for exercise. He has a lot of unruly boys who occasionally stand out for a threshing, which sixteen of 'em got in a single day, recently.

The Hudson man, who's the divorced husband of Helen Culver, now wishes he wasn't. Helen is the girl to whom the late Charles Hull, of Chicago, left his millions.

The state agricultural college has a much larger number of students than last year. Theoretical farming seems to be on the increase; but this may not account for the smallness of last year's wheat crop.

The earnings of Michigan railways reach nearly $80,000,000 for the past year, being about $1,000,000 less than for the preceding year.

By the burning of H. E. Staple's barn, four miles from Montague, sixty head of cattle and seventeen horses were cremated, and a large amount of other property was destroyed.

H. O. Mills, Detroit's hustling evangelist, struck Perry a short time since and twelve days afterward had 102 sinners safely corralled. He had also induced 250 people to pledge themselves to refrain from firewater as a daily beverage.

About 135,000,000 feet of lumber and 120,000,000 shingles were cut on the line of the Chicago & West Michigan railway last year.

Learning that Shelby has five doctors, a tombstone man and a casket agent struck that town together one day last week. Comment is unnecessary.

Deafness Can't be Cured

by local application, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucus lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is intirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflamation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucus surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that we can not cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circular, free.

The New Warship "Yorktown."

WASHINGTON CITY, March 9.—It is intimated at the navy department that there were certain matters to be considered before accepting the Yorktown, of so important a character that Secretary Whitney, in the limited time at his disposal, did not care to go into them. From what is said at the department, the inference is that Secretary Tracey will be occupied for quite a while over the case of the Yorktown, and a well-known ship builder expresses the opinion that the Cramps are likely to have as unpleasant an experience with the department over the Yorktown as John Roach had over the Dolphin.

A Riot Between Democratic Factions.

TROY, N. Y., March 9.—Saturday noon a bloody riot occurred at a Democratic caucus in the Fourth wardof West Troy. Several men were injured, revolvers discharged, and Policeman McGrath was arrested for disorderly conduct. The poll barricades where the caucus was held, were broken down, and the bar-room of a hotel was nearly destroyed. The fight was between two warring Democratic factions of the ward.

That Tired Feeling

That extreme tired feeling which is so distressing and often so unaccountable in the spring months, is entirely overcome by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which tones the whole body, purifies the blood, cures scrofula and all humors, cures dyspepsia, creates an appetite, renses the torpid liver, braces up the nerves and clears the mind. We solicit a comparison of Hood's Sarsaparilla with any other blood purifier in the market for purity, economy, strength, and medicinal merit.

Tired all the Time

"I had no appetite or strength, and felt tired all the time. I attributed my condition to scrofulous humor. I had tried several kinds of medicine without benefit. But as soon as I had taken half a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, my appetite was restored, and my stomach felt better. I have now taken nearly three bottles, and I never was so well." MRS. JESSIE F. DOLBEARE, Pascoag, R. I.

Mrs. C. W. Marriott, Lowell, Mass., was completely cured of sick headache, which she had 16 years, by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Everybody needs and should take a good spring medicine, for two reasons:

1st, The body is now more susceptible to benefit from medicine than at any other season.

2d, The impurities which have accumulated in the blood should be expelled, and the system given tone and strength, before the prostrating effects of warm weather are felt.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best spring medicine. A single trial will convince you of its superiority. Take it before it is too late.

The Best Spring Medicine

"I take Hood's Sarsaparilla for a spring medicine, and I find it just the thing. It tones up my system and makes me feel like a different man. My wife takes it for dyspepsia, and she derives great benefit from it. She says it is the best medicine she ever took." F. C. TURNER, Hook & Ladder No. 1, Boston, Mass.

"Last spring I was troubled with boils, caused by my blood being out of order. Two bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla cured me. I can recommend it to all troubled with affections of the blood." J. SCHOCH, Peoria, Ill.

FOUR NEW STATE

South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana, Washington.

On February 22, 1889, the President signed the bill creating Soute Dakota, North Dakota, Montana and Washington states of the Union.

South Dakota—The great Prairie State, in which the St. Paul Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has three lines, reaching Ellendale, Aberdeen, Huron, Watertown and Sioux Falls. Go to south Dakota via the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway and pass through St. Paul and Minneapolis en route.

North Dakota—Where is grown the No. 1 Hard Scotch Fife Wheat; whose healthful climate nurtures the most vigorous and brainy civilization on earth; where single counties raise more wheat, oats and barley than entire states, the soil of whose fertile prairies is richer than the valley of the Nile; where the Turtle Mountain, Minot and Devils Lake land districts invite the home seeker to secure a free home. Magnificent daily trains in service to Fargo, Grand Forks, Grafton, Devils Lake, Bottineau and all other important points.

Montana—the Golden—Treasures in her mines of precious metals; wealth in her 4,000,000 head of live stock; profit in her fertile lands, producing a larger yield of crops than any other state or territory; the richest country per inhabitant on earth; where prosperity is universal; which has the best paid labor in the world; a balmy winter climate caused by warm winds from the Pacific. The St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway is the only railroad passing through a continuous agricultural country from St. Paul and Minneapolis to the Rocky Mountains. It runs through the great Reservation of 18,000,000 acres of land, free to settlers, in the Milk River Valley. Wood, water and coal in abundance; no irrigation required; the only line passing through Great Falls with its 1,000,000 horse power cataracts; immense coal veins, and surrounding farming country of free land; through Helena, the capital city and commercial center of Montana, and Butte, the richest mining camp on earth to San Francisco by the Columbia River Valley, Portland and Shasta Route or Ogden, Utah, to California points. Remember this is the only line running dining cars, sleeping cars and free colonists sleepers of its own to from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Great Falls, Helena and Butte. It is also the shortest line to Butte.

Washington—The country of tall timbers, indented by Puget Sound, the Mediterranean of the Pacific. Do not forget that the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railroad is the only line which offers a choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. The Manitoba-Pacific route is the only line by which passengers en route for Tacoma, Portland and San Francisco can pass through Port Townsend and Seattle. Free colonist sleepers run through without change or delay. Distance to the Pacific coast is the same as by other lines, but prices of tickets are five and ten dollars less. Take the Seattle route.

If the money spent, had been distributed among the deserving poor, it would have done more good then the inaugurat'n did harm. CLIPPINGS AND CONDENSATIONS.

Addison Post G. A. R. produced the celebrated comedy, Solon Shingle, March 20th.

Congressman Allen has returned to his home in Ypsilanti, and opened a law office in the new Savings Bank building.

Eureka cheese factory of Ogden, operated by S. J. Stever, consumed 969,987 pounds of milk last season, producing 96,984 pounds of cheese. It paid out $8,000 among the farmers of that section.—Blissfield Advance.

A Camden man broke two of his ribs, and two weeks later attended a W. R. C. supper. It is impossible to break up a Hillsdale county man sufficiently to spoil his appetite.—Hudson Post.

The Rollin correspondent of the Hudson Post says he could never get a drop of liquor in the place, and in the next paragraph relates seeing logs twelve feet in circumference, lying around the saw mill. We refrain from comment.—Adrian Press.

Arkansas City Dispatch: The city marshal of Winfield has posted the following proclamation on the lamp posts of that town. "All persons as owns dogs are hereby certified that sed dogs is indebted to this sity in the sum of one $, and if they don't pay will be persecuted to the fullest extent of the constitootion, this means bizness. Sity Marshal."

The readers of the Evening News are just now much interested in Geo. Larwell's serial, "The Secret Mission." It is a literary success, and makes one wonder why our good natured Adrian printer friend did not sooner give the public some of the good things which so naturally flow from his pen. We shall expect to hear from him often and favorably in the future.—Hudson Post.

Bros. Stearns and Grandon, of Adrian, are engaged in a word fight over the local mail service. The former tries to press his competitor out of the ring, and the latter brandishes his Lance in a dangerous manner. Better "jeff" neighbors, to see who is the victor, and then smoke the pipe of peace.—Addison Courier.

Samuel J. Tilden, the big puss at H. C. Hal's grocery, died a few days ago. He was born the day Tilden was nominated in 1876. He was a princely feline, carried his head high, and acted as if he knew just as well as the Republicans did, that he was named after a regularly elected President of the United States.—Hudson Gazette.

Severe sneezing has been known to restore the hearing according to the Tecumseh Herald. But a Deerfield lady once sneezed off the back part of her harness on the street with no such effect, remarking as she surveyed the ruin, that when she got to sneezing, she "almost sneezed her head off."—Adrian Press.

COUGH! and COUGH! and COUGH!

What in the world is the reason you will cough and keep coughing and still keep trying inferior medicines when BEGGS' CHERRY COUGH SYRUP will positively relieve your cough at once? This is no advertising scheme, but an actual fact, and we guarantee it. J. J. ORR, Druggist.

A Boom in Real Estate.

PIERRE, D. T., March 16.—Real estate excitement is rapidly on the increase, and the hills are dotted with surveys. One eighty-acre tract of unplotted ground north of the city sold Friday for $42,000. The total sales Friday were over $100,000. The street railway capital has increased to $100,000. Other parties are figuring on a motor franchise. The hotel is overrun and other buildings have been improvised for the accommodation of visitors. Ordway's interest in one piece of ground was closed out by telegraph Friday for $32,000.

Had a Close Shave for Life.

CHICAGO, March 18.—William Schmidt's cracker and biscuit bakery, 75 to to 81 Clybourne avenue, a four-story frame building, burned at 1 o'clock yesterday morning. The flames spread with great rapidity, and it was with considerable difficulty that the firemen were able to rescue the sixty employes, including bakers, teamsters and girls, who boarded in the bakery and roomed on the fourth floor of the building.

THE GRUMBLER.

The well known story of the two boys who, under the cognomen of "Eyes and No Eyes," went out for a walk, in which the one saw nothing worthy of record, while the other saw a great deal both to amuse and interest him, is a good deal older than Sandford and Merton, where most of us read it in the old days of long ago. No doubt, "it is," as we say, "as old as the hills"—though wise men have not yet quite settled how old they are—and as true as such proverbs usually are. For, as a general rule, the eye sees only what it wishes to see or cares to see; and there are "none so blind as those who won't see," and then, perversely enough, try to comfort themselves with another old saying, "What the eye sees not, the heart doesn't crave."

I had been reading an old volume of Danish proverbs about Eyes and No Eyes, as it chanced, one day in October, just before setting out for a ramble through the woods; and as I wandered on down one of the grassy roads I suddenly came upon a couple of squirrels at play—a downright game of frisking romp. The carpet under my feet was soft and thick—

> Golden and red, purple and brown,
> Lightly the woodland leaves came down,
> Fluttering here and whirling there
> All in the hazy, ambient air;

so that not a footfall could be heard, and I could watch the two little merry sprites by simply getting under the boughs of a great copper beech and standing still, without a chance of detection.

It was a day of dead sultry calm; and as I watched and listened, there fell on me an air of intense stillness and silence that seemed to fill all the wood. Right and left of me, on every side, were dense masses of trees—tall feathery silver birch; broad spreading beeches, with smooth, solemn, massive trunks; sturdy knotted yews, looking as if they had stood there for centuries; strong mighty oaks, with gnarled and twisted stems that stretched across the winding pathway, as if on guard over the quiet domain. Some of them I knew well, for I had seen them in all weathers; and again and again found shelter from rain or sun under their spreading boughs. They seemed like old friends, who betray no trust; even in winter stanch and true, as if standing and waiting in patience and in hope for the far off but sure days of spring, the time of new life and light, living and dying without suffering or self reproach; and "gifted with the divine gift of silence," which, according to a modern sage, is the most eloquent of all speech, for those who can hear it, when "The Book of Nature getteth short of leaves."

But however "golden" such silence may be, and however divine the prophet of Cheyne Row, this one of woodland voices was, like all other mortal dreams, brought suddenly to an end. All at once, not a hundred yards away, there came pounding along over the dead leaves a little old man in a long gray coat; with his hat pulled down over his eyes, and a stout ash plant in his hand, with which he slashed vigorously right and left among the briers and nettles. It was old Elzie Bartle, a strange old creature, who lived in a lonely cottage at the end of the village, and spent most of his time in minding other people's business. Business of his own he seemed to have none; and the neighbors knew no more as to who or what he was than they did when he came among them, a stranger, twenty years ago. He had money enough to pay his way and keep out of debt; was without encumbrances of any kind, and seemed to have neither relatives nor friends that ever cared to write to or visit him.

Jacob, the postman, affirms to this day that no letter ever came to him by post but a circular from the surveyor of taxes at the county town. The moment I set eyes on him in the wood I went back to my book of Danish proverbs, and to one particular line therein, which said: "Some there are who see ill, and wouldn't mind seeing worse;" and there before me was the very man whom the words fitted to a T.

"Well, squire," said the old man, as he came up, "here's a day for October! A regular, sweltering, moldy sort of day, I call it; enough to breed a fever all over the place. No wonder there's two more cases of measles down at the keeper's; not the two boys that got bitten by the sheep dog last week, but girls this time; a poor, sickly lot! and no wonder, with such a mother."

"Such a mother?" said I. "Why, what's the matter with the mother?—as clean, tidy, hard working a woman as you'll find in a day's march."

"Nonsense, squire—non-sense! They sell gin, now, up at Murridge's the draper, and if Mrs. Gaiters isn't one of his best customers, my name isn't Bartle. No, no; I know what I know, squire, though I don't want it to go any further."

"You had better not let it go as far as her husband's ears, Elzie, or he might tumble you into the horse pond and not help you out again. It's deep, Bartle, and muddy too."

"No doubt, squire, no doubt; but, as I was saying when you interrupted me, I know what I know, though you needn't let it go any further. Mrs. Gaiters is a good customer at Murridge's, and it was only yesterday I saw her coming out of his shop with a round bundle under her arm that looked as much like a bottle as it could, as I said to Jane Ripper, when I saw her going down the street. And that reminds me, squire, of the nasty drain at the corner. They've got it open again, and I've not met with a worse stench for weeks until just now, before I saw you. I came upon a polecat or a weasel or something of the sort, lying dead in the middle of the path, and enough to poison the whole wood."

"Well, Elzie," said I, "they must open the drain to clear it out; and as for the polecat, he must die somewhere, and as he has got no relations to bury him he must lie there until the ants pick his bones clean for him. But never mind the drains or polecats this glorious afternoon. Come here, man, and look down that narrow green path, right on past the great clump of white clematis, up to where the sunshine is streaming through the black evergreen oak, and lighting up the copper beech, and the cluster of red berries on the spindle tree, as if they were on fire."

"Yes, yes," replied the old man; "I see it. And talking of fire, it was just at this very corner that I caught two of Harris' boys making a fire of bits of furze and a broken hurdle, enough to set the whole copse in a blaze. There, you can see the ashes of it now; and there's a page out of a spelling book, too, as I live—torn out of one of the school books. I'll wager—the mischievous young wretches! But it's all the same where ever you go; nothing but waste and extravagance. All the laborers crying out about low wages and starvation times; and if you believe me, when I went in to Hobbs' cottage last Thursday at 5 o'clock, just to tell him that one of his boys had been caught with his pockets full in Jackson's orchard, there they were, the whole seven of 'em, eating hot buttered toast! 'You seem to be enjoying yourselves,' said I, 'and butter at one and three!' And if you believe me, squire, they all burst out laughing at this; and 'Right you are, Bartle,' says old Hobbs, with his mouth full of toast—'right you are; and why shouldn't we!—will ee have a piece?' 'No,' said I; 'I can't afford to eat melted butter in these times; and if your boy isn't laid up to-morrow, after gorging himself with sour apples, let me know.' 'Well, Bartle, we'll be sure to let you know; and we'll tell old Bolus to send in his bill to you.' There, squire, that's the way they waste their money, and if that boy doesn't get a month on the treadmill before long my name isn't Bartle, that's all."

By this time we had got to the edge of the wood and were turning down into the lane, and as I had more than enough of the old grumbler, I made up my mind to get rid of him. "Good night, Bartle," said I—"good night. For God's sake, don't bother yourself any more about old Hobbs and his boys. He is a hard working, steady fellow enough, and good to his wife too. And as for the apples, the boy only got a couple after all—so Jackson told me—and a good rope's ending into the bargain."

And so, at last, after a final grumble about Hobbs' mother-in-law and a pair of shoes which she had got at Murridge's and never paid for, we shook hands and parted: he across the meadow down to his own cottage, and I sauntering on into the village. And here I fell in with another of our old men, of a totally different look, manner and speech—Jim Samson the blacksmith: a sturdy, well built fellow of 60, with a sun burnt, smutty face, and a pair of sharp gray eyes that brimmed over with fun. His day's work was over: he had shut up his forge and was just going home to tea.

"Sarvant, sir," says Samson. "Hope you're pretty well, sir, after a dose of Elzie? I see you a-coming down the copse together; and I says to myself: 'Squire's a-catchin' of it now and no mistake.' Old Bartle's bin on the rampage all the marning and ready to bust about that there drain up street."

"Well, Samson," said I, "I've had a close this time, and a good one, too."

"Knowed you had, squire, the minute I saw your face. Why, bless 'ee, flesh and blood can't stand it. It's my belief, squire, that there old chap have a-swallowed the east wind,' and it haven't agreed with un. He've a-got the best eye for dirt of any chap I ever set eyes on."

"Swallowed the east wind?" said I. "Why so, Samson?"

"Why, how else could he go on as he do? From marning to night, from one week's end to another, it's nothing but grumble, fidget and growl. First, it's the dreadful accidents, the fires, and the murders: then it's the fever and the riots in Ireland; the paupers, the jails, and the strikes. Everything's going wrong, and there's no good news anywhere. Why, bless 'ee, he come into my forge the other marning, and what's he do but begin foraging about among my tools and putting 'em to rights; making 'em tidy, he says, and upsetting things to that degree that every bit o' fire went out of the coals and put me all of a cold sweat. 'Be off, Bartle!' I says at last. 'Get away out into the sunshine there and take a good drink o' that, and see if you can't clear all them cobwebs out of your brains.' And with that, squire, away he goes out of the place like a mad March hare!"

"Well done, Samson!" said I, "well done! If he would but take your advice, that wretched old croaker would be a different man in a month, instead of a nuisance to himself and all his neighbors.—Good night, Samson.—How's the wind?"

"West, sir—west to everybody in the place but old Bartle.—But he keeps his own weathercock, he do, and it's nothin' but 'east by northeast,' and dirty weather. It's a pity such people was ever born."

As I wended my way home through the wood and watched the soft mellow sunshine glinting down among the tall trunks of ruddy beech, and lighting up the green pathways with patches of golden splendor, it seemed a pity indeed that such miserable failures as old Elzie should exist to mar the beauty and peace of the whole scene.

The smith's words were true words; it does seem a mistake that "such people ever was born." Perhaps, in his heart that miserable old bachelor himself inclines to the same way of thinking at times, and he, too, imagines that the world would have been better without him. If so, and he should feel tempted to write his own epitaph, I can save him from all further trouble on that score, in the words of a wise man and a wit of some two thousand years ago (Epicharmus, Epigrammata Graecat:

> At seventy winters' end I died,
> A cheerless being, sole and sad,
> The nuptial knot I never tied,
> And wish my father never had.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in lining membranes of the nos and eustachin tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proven this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permentally cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. DIXON & SON, 303 West King St., Toront, Canada.—Scientific American.

TESTIMONIALS WORTHY OF CONFIDENCE.
My daughter Maud has used Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup and Plasters, which you so strongly recommended her to try for inflammatory rheumatism. Her limbs were badly swollen, and the poor girl was in terrible agony. In the midst of the pain we wound the Plasters about her limbs, and, as a result the swelling was reduced and she became quiet and rested. The syrup corrected her indigestion, cleansed the rheumatic poison from her blood, and she is now able to be around the house. Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup and Plasters are remedies of great merit. REV. J. ROBERTS, Pastor First M. E. Church, Fremont, Mich.
ALBION, Mich., Dec. 20, 1887.—While employed as agent of the Michigan Central Railroad Company at Augusta, Mich., about seven years ago, my kidneys became diseased, and I have been a great sufferer ever since. Have consulted the leading physicians of this city and Ann Arbor, and all pronounced my case Bright's disease. Suffering under a very severe attack in October last, began taking Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup, and am today a well man. It affords me pleasure to render suffering humanity any good that I can, and in speaking of the remedy, allow me to say that I think it the greatest medicine in the world. E. LARZILERE, Agent M. C. BABY HAS GONE TO SCHOOL.

The baby has gone to school, do say!
What will the mother do,
With never a call to bottle or pin,
Or to a little shoe?
How can she keep herself busy all day
With the little "hindering thing" away?

Another basket to fill with lunch,
Another "good-by," to say,
And the mother stands at the door to see,
Her baby march away;
And turns with a sigh that is half relief,
And half a something akin to grief.

She thinks of a possible future more,
When the children one by one,
Will go from their home out into the world,
To battle with life alone,
And not even the baby be left to cheer
The desolate home of that future year.

She picks up garments here and there,
Thrown down in careless haste,
And tries to think how it would seem
If nothing were displaced;
If the hours were always as still as this,
How could she bear the loneliness?

—The Daughters of America.

HE WON TWO PARTNERS.

"No, my dear; I will not hear of anything of the kind. You shouldn't expect it. Why, you would ruin your whole future."

"But, papa, you have told me that Mr. Minot was one of the best men you ever had in your bank."

"So I have, my dear; so I have; but what of that? He's only a clerk."

"But a man of his character and intelligence is sure to make his way in the world, papa."

"Now, pet, don't worry me. I have given you my answer. You must not think of ever marrying Henry Minot. Think of something else."

Thomas Ames was a self sufficient man who had conducted a prosperous banking business for a great many years. He inherited wealth and social position, and he prized the latter as much as he did the former. He was a man of very positive opinions, aristocratic in his manners and somewhat dictatorial, of course. He had found Henry Minot, a young man of studious, economical habits, thoroughly conversant with every detail of the banking business, a natural financier, and withal unassuming and becomingly deferential to the grand banker who had taken him into his employ when he had sought everywhere else in vain.

He had been in the bank but a short time before Mr. Ames noticed his fidelity and thoroughness. He had been advanced from the position of messenger to that of a clerk, and he was working earnestly for higher promotion.

He had first seen the banker's daughter at the bank. He had not spoken to her then, but whenever she came to the bank he had gazed at her from afar, thoroughly infatuated with her beauty, her vivacity and her cordial manners.

How they became acquainted it matters not to tell. They had become good friends and the banker knew it, but did not think anything would come of it. He trusted the young man implicitly. He did not believe his daughter would ever regard his attentions in any other light than as a convenience.

Shortly after the conversation recorded in the opening of this story Mr. Ames called Mr. Minot into his private office and said, with lofty dignity:

"Mr. Minot, you have betrayed my confidence."

"How's that, sir?"

"Why, you have been speaking to my daughter in a way that I did not suppose you would."

"How's that, sir?"

"You have been talking nonsense to her."

"What sort of nonsense, sir?"

"Love nonsense."

"You are mistaken, sir. I have never uttered a word of love to your daughter."

Mr. Ames looked at Mr. Minot in amazement.

"Do you mean, sir, that you do not love Miss Ames?"

"I do not mean anything of the kind."

"What do you mean, then?"

"I mean that I have never uttered a word of love to Miss Ames."

"I have been misinformed, sir. You may retire," said Mr. Ames with hauteur.

Mr. Minot confined himself more than ever to his duties in the bank. He purposely avoided meeting Miss Ames anywhere. No one could perceive that he entertained any other feeling than exalted respect for the young lady who had suitors by the score.

Five months passed away. Mr. Ames looked worried beyond measure. He was pressed for ready money. Some of his ventures had been terribly disastrous. He was straining every nerve on a tight money market to tide over. There was withal a leak somewhere which he sought in vain to locate.

He was in his private office one day, leaning back in a chair, with his hands locked above his head, thoroughly perplexed. Mr. Henry Minot entered the charmed precincts unannounced and locked the door upon him. Mr. Ames turned upon him sharply and irritably exclaimed:

"To what am I indebted for the honor of this intrusion, Mr. Minot?"

"To your interest, sir," said Mr. Minot, with cool deliberation.

"I think I am able to look after my interest, sir!" said Mr. Ames.

"I know you are; but you also pay me to help you look after it."

"You misunderstand you position, sir!"

"That depends," said Mr. Minot. "Suppose there was a leakage in the bank and that I had discovered it, would you expect me to keep my mouth shut?"

"I should not, certainly."

Mr. Minot then explained to Mr. Ames that he had discovered many false entries in the books, and had traced them back for a number of years. The cashier had been systematically robbing the bank, and in the past three months he had grown dangerously reckless.

Mr. Ames looked at Mr. Minot in stupefied astonishment.

"There are rumors flying about the street that the Ames bank is in a bad way," said Mr. Minot. "I am sorry to hear it."

"Young man," said Mr. Ames, "I am standing on a brink. My sad speculations and the dishonesty of my cashier have placed my affairs in a desperate posture. The money market is tighter than I ever knew it to be before; I have out more paper than I can redeem. You will have to seek another situation soon. I shall have to suspend business."

"How much do you require to tide over?" asked the clerk.

"What matters it?" asked Mr. Ames.

"I may be able to help you," said the clerk.

"You! How can you help me?" said the banker in a pitying voice.

"I have some money. I am not a pauper. My uncle died six months ago and left me the bulk of his fortune. I can advance you any money you may need to meet your obligation and place your business on a secure foundation again."

When Mr. Ames had recovered from the shock caused by Mr. Minot's disclosure and the magnanimity he displayed, the difficulties of the business were thoroughly discussed. The business was badly tangled, but Mr. Minot thought he could straighten it out.

When he went home that afternoon Miss Ames was surprised at the cheerfulness of her father.

"My dear, Mr. Minot will take tea with us today."

"Indeed!" The confusion of Miss Ames was complete. "Mr. Minot is only a clerk. You have not heretofore honored your clerks with an invitation to tea."

"My dear, Mr. Minot is my partner."

When tea was over and the trio had adjourned to the parlor, Miss Ames said, in an aside:

"Papa, may Mr. Minot be my partner, too?"

"Of course, my dear. He is one of the firm—so are you—my partner and your partner, you know," and the happy old financier laughed merrily at his own wit.

A Strayed Horse.

Bub Pratt, of Troup county, Ga., is the owner of a valuable horse. A short time ago the horse strayed off and diligent search failed to locate his whereabouts, and Mr. Pratt had about given up all hope of seeing the animal again. Thirteen days after he was missed a negro boy while hunting in the swamp found the horse in the bed of the creek, standing in the water, the high banks on either side preventing the horse's escape. He immediately reported the matter to the owner, when several of the neighbors went with him to relieve the horse of its long imprisonment. The bank of the creek had to be dug down, and when the incline was completed the horse lost no time in rushing to the top, though he was much exhausted by the terrible exposure. He had been in the creek thirteen days without other food than that he had picked from the almost bare banks. The hair about his legs all dropped off from being in the water so long, but he seemed to suffer no further damage.—Chicago Herald.

Blood Oranges.

The blood orange is a mere variety of the sweet orange obtained by cultivation, and appears first to have been raised by the Spanish gardeners in the Philippine Islands, from the capital of which (Manila) it, together with the well known cigars, formed at one time one of the chief articles of export. On its first appearance in Europe it excited a considerable sensation, and in the last century very high prices were demanded for the trees which bore the wonderful fruit. None, however, now come to us from Manila, our supply being derived almost entirely from Malta, where great pains and attention are bestowed upon their cultivation. It was for a long time supposed, and indeed the idea is not yet quite extinct, that blood oranges were produced by the grafting of the orange with the pomegranate; but there is not the slightest foundation for this belief.—Chambers' Journal.

A Nut for the Scientists.

Mrs. Thomas Land, living in the suburbs of Carlisle, while sitting before her grate containing burning coal, observed something imbedded in a chunk of coal, and without stopping to think whether it might be of interest or value, took the poker and tore the substance out, which proved on examination to be an iron ring about one and one-half inches in diameter, which showed that it had been corroded by fire long ago. This coal was taken from the mine one-half mile north of Carlisle, at a depth of 211 feet. Is not this a mystery how this ring, similar to a ring used on the end of a common trace chain, became imbedded in coal hundreds of feet under ground, and which was formed thousands of years ago?—Princeton (Ind.) Clarion.

It Was His Name.

There was a story current at Cambridge, not long ago, to the effect that the proctor one night discovered an undergraduate on Magdalen bridge endeavoring, as he thought, to get into bed. The outraged don demanded the inebriate's name and college, and the latter replied: "Nott of Magdalen." The proctor repeated his question, and received the same answer. "I don't want to know what college you are not of," he cried angrily, "but what college you do belong to." "My good man," replied the undergraduate with intense solemnity, "I have no other name to give you. Go away, I'm trying to find my bed."—All the Year Round.

A Learned Dog as a Witness.

A very learned dog appeared before Mr. O'Donnel in the Dublin police court recently as a witness on a dispute as to his ownership. A Mr. Burke claimed to be his owner as against a man named Smith, who had had the animal since last August, when Mr. Burke said he lost him. Mr. Burke, who has been in India, said he taught the dog Hindoostance and Tamil, and the dog, on being brought into court and addressed by him in these languages, immediately responded, did several things he was desired to do, and was therefore restored to Mr. Burke.—Pall Mall Gazette.

CALIFORNIA LETTER.

Question Second. What is the climate of California?

The climate of Southern California is the most varied and the most perfect of any portion of the United States. One can find here any kind of climate they desire, from the torrid temperature of the Colorado desert to the frigid temperature of the snowcapped mountains of the interior. The climate of the coast region of San Diego county is the most equible of the state or of the United States.

Here homes can be made, such as cannot be made in any other portions of the country, surrounded by lovely vegetation, flowers blooming in the open air all winter, with sunshine nearly every day in the year. Where lightning rods and cyclone caves are never needed, neither are mosquito nets, where the breeze is never at rest except at night, and seldom then. Where in the winter the temperature rarely gets as low as 50° and in the summer above 80°, of cool nights for rest, when a good covering of blankets are required, where you never see mud for but a few days at a time in the winter. In the rainy season there is less rainy and more clear days than in any eastern state. People coming here and spending one year, enjoying the pleasures and beauties of our climate, and of our productions, will be convinced of the superiority of southern California over any other portion of the United States.

"The United States records at the San Diego signal station, show that in 10 years there was but 120 days on which the mercury passed 80°, of these 120 there but 41 on which it passed 85° but 22 on which it passed 90° but 4 over 95° and only one over 100°. During all this time there was not a day on which the mercury did not fall to at least 70° during the night, and there was but six days on which it did not fall even lower. During the same 10 years there were but 6 days on which the mercury fell below 35°, this low temperature comes only in extreme dry weather in winter, and lasts but a few minutes, happening just before sunrise. On two of these days it fell to 32° at daylight the lowest point ever registered here. The lowest midday temperature is 52°, and occuring only four times in 10 years, from 65° to 70° is the average temperature of noonday throughout the greater part of the year."

Near on the coast people can bathe in the ocean in January as pleasantly as in the July. From here we can look off onto snow capped mountains, and we have never seen a snow flake here. We have had some frosts, and on two or three mornings this winter we have seen thin ice formed, but frost and ice forms just before day, and but very little damage is done to vegetation. The reasons given why frosts do so little damage to vegetation is owing to the influence of the ocean on the atmosphere. There is never a day but there is a breeze either from the sea or the mountains. The sea breezes generally prevail in the day, and the mountain by night.

All winter the days are generally bright and warm and there are but few days on which the sun does not shine bright for a part or all of the day. Many not acquainted with this climate think that being so far south the summers must be very hot, but this is not so. The fatigues of heat are not known, and persons working on the roof of houses in the hottest weather experience no inconvenience. Sunstroke is not known, and cholera and yellow fever has never visited Southern California. The reason for all this is the influence of the sea on the atmosphere. Going back among the mountains the climate changes gradually, the valleys become hotter in the summer and the winters colder, and the valleys more subject to frosts, while the hills are exempt, yet the sun shines as brightly and the atmosphere is more beneficial to invalids.

Most people coming here with impaired health, with chronic diseases, rheumatism, asthma and consumption or throat diseases, are either cured or greatly benefited. The mountain regions are the most beneficial for rheumatism, asthma and consumption, owing to the dryness of the atmosphere. This may truly be said to be a healthy country, yet we are not without sickness, and doctors and drug stores do a good business. Epidemics are rarely known diseases seem to be of a different nature and type, and more mild than in the east. No portion of the country, and especially cities, show a lower death rate than Southern California.

There is not a more delightful summer resort in the country, and it is equally as a delightful winter resort. Our climate may be summed up as follows:

"1st. Warm winters.

2d. Dry summers.

3d. Cooler summers than are found elsewhere on the same latitude, and on account of the unfailing sea breeze, summers much more comfortable than can be found on the Atlantic coast even of the middle states.

4th. An atmosphere much dryer in winter than is found in summer on the Atlantic coast, and as dry in summer as is consistent with a good growth of vegetation.

5th. Absolute freedom from malaria of any kind except where locally caused by excessive irrigation or foul cities.

6th. Absolute freedom from cyclones, tornadoes or dangerous winds of any kind, and entire freedom from lightning, thunder storms and cloud bursts, except occasionally upon the deserts and high mountains.

7th. Climate where many childrens' complaints, such as the dreaded bowel complaints of "second summer," are unknown, and many others, such as measles, scarlet fever, etc., are very scarce and very much modified.

8th. A remarkable freedom from insect pests of all kinds, except where locally caused, as mosquitoes around open tanks, or flees around ill kept places.

9th. Cool nights in summer caused by rapid radiation of heat from the earth through the dry air.

10th. Warm days in winter from the opposite cause—the more rapid transmission of the heat rays through dry air. A. D. S.

DETROIT'S FLOWER SHOW.

Detroit is to have a floral exhibition—the first one in Michigan—on April 2, 3, 4 and 5. All the 24 Detroit florists and many others from various parts of the State will make displays of the rarest and most beautiful flowers, having especially timed their growing plants with the flower show in view. Then, too, the ladies of Detroit who are interested in the various city charities are to have booths for the sale of flowers. Young ladies in costume will be in attendance on the booths and the whole affair will be one of the most attractive exhibitions Detroit has ever witnessed. The entire net proceeds of the flower show are to be divided equally among the 21 charities represented in the enterprise. Arrangements have been made for excursions from all parts of the state to Detroit at the time of the exhibition and the details as to special rates of fare may be learned by applying to the local ticket agents. The exhibition originated with Mr. W. H. Brearley, of the Detroit Journal, who acts as general manager. Col. Fred Farnsworth is the secretary and Mr Frank D. Taylor is the treasurer. The Detroit Journal guarantees the charities against loss—a somewhat needless precaution, where there is such positive assurance of success.

OBITUARY.

We clip the following from the Antwerp, Ohio, Argus Many of our older residents will remember the deceased, who lived in Tecumseh over forty years ago:

Mrs. M. P. G. Osborn, born at Patterson, New Jersey, June 11th, 1815; died at Cleveland, Ohio, March 7th, 1889.

The early life of deceased was spent in New York city and vicinity, removed from that city to Michigan in 1837, even before railroads were much known—going to Albany by steamboat, thence to Toledo by canal, and balance of journey—33 miles to Tecumseh, Michigan, by wagon. Here she suffered all the privations incident to pioneer life, but never allowed it to sour her disposition or cloud her home life. She always kept abreast of the times; kept her mind bright and clear, and stimulated her children to always do their best. Home was her empire, and even in the earlier days she made it bright for all the loved ones. Coming to Antwerp in the early days of the war, she in her quiet, unobtrusive way, identified herself with whatever was to be done to improve church and society, and was well known in this way to most of our people. For ten years past she lived at Cleveland, O., where she was beloved by all who knew her, and all her friends and neighbors were full of kindly deeds to her during her weeks of suffering and sickness. She leaves three children—a daughter, residing at Cleveland, O., one son living at Frankford, Mo., and one son at Antwerp, their wives and husbands, together with five grandchildren, two in Antwerp, two in Frankford, one in Charlotte, Tenn., and two great-grand children, all who mourn the loss of one, loved as few only are in this world.

Funeral services were held in the Presbyterian church, this place, Sunday afternoon, March 10th, 1889, Rev. J. W. McClusky officiating, after which her remains were laid to rest in the Antwerp cemetery, by bereaved relatives and sympathizing friends.

ROBERT A. GUNN M. D., Dean and Prof. of Surgery of the United States Medical College, Editor of "Medical Tribune," Author of "Gunn's New Improved Hand-book of Hygiene and Domestic Medicine," says over his own signature in addressing proprietors of Warner's Safe Cure: "I cannot be true to my convictions unless I extend a hand and endorse all I know to be good and trustworthy. Your graphic discriptions of diseases of the kidneys and liver have awakened the medical profession to the fact of their great increase. Physicians have been experimentally treating this disease, and while casting about for an authorized reinedy, their patients have died on their hands."

Don't Get Cought

This spring with your blood full of impurities, your digestion impaired, your appetite poor, kidneys and liver torpid, and whole system liable to be prostrated by disease—but get yourself into good condition, and ready for the changing and warmer weather, by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. It stands unequaled for purifying the blood, giving an appetite, and for a general spring medicine.

THE ORGAN CONCERT.

The new pipe organ at the M. E church was fully tested last Monday evening, when a fine musical program was presented for the benefit of the organ fund. Prof. York, who is connected with the conservatory of music at Ann Arbor, and organist of the Church of Our Father at Detroit, presided at the organ, and he was assisted by our best home talent. The program, although gotten up in a hurry, was a very creditable one, and was sufficiently varied in character to show the good qualities of the instrument. We present it in outline:

Organ voluntary, Offertoire by Wely—Prof. York.

Vocal Solo, Guardian Angel—Miss Dora Grayson.

Violin Solo, Le Jolie Coquette—Miss Mabel Hayden.

Organ, Rustic March—Prof. York.

Vocal Duet, Life's Dream is O'er—Misses Ella Hall and Belle Barlow.

Cornet Solo, Good Night, Farewell—Dr. C. M. Woodward.

Coronation, the entire audience joining.

Intermission.

Organ, Musette, Handel—Prof. York.

Vocal Solo, Could I But Say—Miss Dora Grayson.

Cornet Solo, Now I lay me down to sleep—Dr. Woodward.

Vocal Trio the Mocking Bird—Misses Hall, Barlow and Grayson.

Violin Solo, Polish National Dance—Miss Mabel Hayden.

Organ, Pontifical March—Prof. York.

Prof. York is an admirable organist. Although a young man, he is a musical artist of much reputation, and marked ability. Under his skillful touch both the powerful tones and the delicate notes of the instrument were fully brought out. Whether accompanying a simple vocal melody, or rolling out the grand pontifical march he was equally at home. The selections rendered by home talent were all good. Dr. Woodward and Miss Mabel Hayden never acquitted themselves better. Miss Grayson gained new friends with her simple but effective melodies. Misses Hall and Barlow added a new laurel to their chaplet. It is seldom that a Tecumseh audience have the pleasure of listening to their beautiful voices and the auditors were charmed. The vocal trio was rapturously encored and one verse of the song and chorus was repeated. Their part in the program deserved and received the highest encomiums. The church was crowded with an enthusiastic audience and a handsome addition was made to the organ fund.

THE M. E. CHURCH ORGAN.

The new pipe organ, ordered several weeks ago for the M. E. Church of this village is now in position, and was put on trial at the organ concert last Monday evening. The instrument is a magnificent one in every respect. It is a two manual, full pedal organ, with 775 pipes and 21 stops. It is encased in an elegantly finished case of quartered oak. It is 22 feet high, eleven feet front and seven feet deep, and contains eleven thousand pieces. It was manufactured by S. S. Hamill of East Cambridge, Mass., and cost complete $1800. As the Agent who made the sale gives the church the benefit of his commission, the net cost to the church will be something less than this figure. It was ordered through Harry Tansley. The order was filled in sixty days after its reception, and the instrument was ready for pumping in just one week after its arrival. Mr. Hamill, the maker, had personal charge of setting up and he was assisted by Harry Tansley. The organ is located in the northwest corner of the main audience room, upon an enlarged platform made for the purpose, and adds very much to the general interior appearance of the church. Our Methodist friends have certainly done themselves proud in their enterprise, and now have the satisfaction of owning the finest church organ in Tecumseh. We doubt whether there is a better instrument in the county.

WRITING MACHINE CABINET and OFFICE DESK

For Remington, Hammond,

The advantages of this Type writer and Office Desk over all other so-called Combination Cabinets, are:

First.—The ease and simplicity with which the desk is changed from a Library or Office Desk to a Type-writer Table. This change is effected by pushing the lid covering the machine back in the rear of cabinet—it being a roller top—removing it entirely from sight, thus overcoming the objectionable noise and sounder in front of the operator. The metallic top is perfectly flat, is beautifully covered, and forms a complete writing desk when the machine is not in use. The table on which the machine rests is so evenly balanced by our patent adjustments that it needs but a slight touch to bring the machine in position.

Second.—The advantages of the swinging table are. The table is so balanced near its center on patent malleable iron supports that when the machine is brought in place for use it does not depend on rollers or hangers at rear of platform for support, but is held rigidly in place by its own weight, making it impossible for the machine to be tumbled down an incline in back of desk by the breaking of a rear support. The machine rests on patent slides which keep the machine in place, and can be drawn out beyond the desk, when under the operator's hand.

Third.—The construction of the lid closing machine space makes it air tight, and the table having felt around its boarders thoroughly protects the machine from dust.

Fourth.—The foot rest and the construction of the table adjustments makes the desk as ridged as though the top was one solid board, which is a matter of great importance where a solid type-writing table is required. No operator can do good work on a shaky table.

Lastly.—The cabinet is a splendid piece of cabinet work. We manufacture them in Walnut, Antique Oak, Natural Oak, Natural Cherry, Cherry imitation, Mahogany and Ash.

Agents wanted to sell these cabinets, and where we have no agencies established we will sell direct from works at wholesale prices.

A SANITARY CONVENTION.

This village will be descended upon in June by the disciples of Esculapius, and the learned men of sanitary science for the purpose of holding a sanitary convention. At a meeting held Tuesday evening in Dr. Howell's office, at which Dr. Henry Baker of Lansing, State Sec. of the Board of Health was present, preliminary arrangements were effected and a program nearly completed or mapped out. The dates fixed upon were June 6 and 7. Five sessions will be held, two the first day and three the second. Papers will be read by persons both at home and from abroad, and Gov. Luce is expected to be present, as will also several members of the State Board of Health.

These conventions will be held in different parts of the State, and the public can become acquainted with the cause and prevention of communicable diseases, and a fund of valuable information may be acquired from the proceedings of the convention. The following officers were elected at the meeting:

Pres.—Dr. Geo. Howell.
Sec.—Dr. L. G. North.
Treas.—A. W. Mills.
1st. Vice Pres.—Dr. S. Catlin.

Several other vice presidents were elected from different towns in the county.

A CHURCH WEDDING.

The Universalist church was crowded to suffocation last evening to witness the marriage of the pastor Rev. John M. Getchell to Miss Clara Quackenbush. Promptly at the appointed hour, the contracting parties and Rev. J. H. Palmer of Lansing, the officiating clergyman, entered the church to the music of the wedding march. Mr. Palmer recited a brief prayer followed by a simple marriage formula, and the knot was tied. Congratulations and hand shaking followed. The entire ceremony was simplicity itself. The happy couple retired at once to the parsonage and took possession of their future home. Thus, without parade, or reception, or supper, two hearts were made one and another couple set out on life's uncertain journey. We all know the groom and respect him as a man and a minister. The few who know the bride speak in the highest terms of her womanly qualities and filial devotion. That the union may prove a happy one to the parties, and an auspicious one to the church over which Bro. Getchell presides and to his sacred calling, is the sincere prayer of all who know them. May the Good Father bless them and keep them and give them peace.

The Ranch King Company played to a small house Tuesday night, which should have been larger, as the company was a strong one and presented the melodrama in a manner that kept the house alternating between smiles and tears. The King was laboring under a hard cold and could not do justice to his part. Ross as the Irish man kept the people in a roar of laughter.

Thos. White sat quietly reading his daily newspaper last Monday night, and just finished a blood curdling account of a white cap outrage when someone knocked at his door. He opened it and looked out on a crowd of nearly 100 persons. Giving one glance he turned to make his escape with a cry of "white caps," but recognizing friendly voices he remained and found they were his Baptist friends who wished to say farewell before his departure east. In the course of the evening Dr. North, in behalf of the company presented the host with a fine oxidized silver table lamp.

On Wednesday, March 13, representatives of the state organizations of the W.C.T.U., the I.O.G.T., the R. T. of T. and the S. of T. met at Lansing and decided to unite in securing petitions to the present legislature asking for the passage of a prohibition law, commending House bill No. 303 introduced by Hon. Henry Watson, which is an out and out prohibition bill, framed after the Kansas and Iowa laws. Albert Dodge, of Fowlerville, Grand Secretary of the I. O.G.T. was chosen secretary and charged with distributing and collecting the petitions. Already several thousand have been sent out, and any who have not received one, and who are willing to circulate the same, are requested to write him for blank petitions.

The next annual encampment of the Southeastern Michigan G. A. R. Association will probably be held in Jackson, a large number of the members having expressed themselves in favor of the Central City. The secretary will call a meeting of the executive council at Jonesville, about the 10th or 15th of April, when the matter of location will be decided. He says the expenses of the encampment, including the prizes offered, would amount to $1,000 or $1,500, and the place selected as a location would be expected to contribute towards these expenses. At the last encampment, at Adrian, two years ago, there was an average of 20,000 people present each of the four days of the encampment.

A BEAUTIFUL RESIDENCE.

On the first day of May, 1888, the work of demolishing the old Kneeland homestead on Chicago street was begun. For more than forty years the house had been a landmark in that section of the village. It was erected by Dr. A. B. Palmer about the year 1844 and was occupied by him until his removal to Ann Arbor to accept a position in the State University. In the year 1854 the property passed into the possession of Thos. T. Kneeland, who moved his family there in the spring of that year, and until two years ago the place was occupied by Mr. Kneeland as his family residence. It was then purchased by Dr. Homer L. Stewart. Dr. Stewart is happily endowed with both business enterprise and public spirit. The financial success of his celery venture enabled him to gratify his ambition to own one of the finest residences in the village. Accordingly with the advent of spring last year the work of demolition began, preparatory to the erection of a fine new modern dwelling. It was decided not to patch up or rebuild, but to erect an entire new structure, and so the old house was razed to its foundations, not a single brick being left upon another. The tearing down was completed in a month or so, and the evolution of the new then began. Each day and week during the summer months witnessed an advance in the structure. Before the first snow fell last fall the rear rooms were so far completed that the family moved in. During the winter the work of papering and finishing the interior was completed, and the finished structure now stands forth in beauty and comliness, the finest residence on Chicago st.

We accepted an invitation the other day from Dr. Stewart to make a tour of inspection of the premises and herewith give our readers the benefit of our observations.

The location is one of the most desirable in the village, being the second door east of the Baptist church on Chicago st. The general arrangement of the rooms was of Mrs. Stewart's planning, but the architect who furnished the plans in detail was N. B. Bacon, Esq., of Toledo. The house is two full stories in hight with a large roomy attic. On the lower floor are the following rooms: Library, parlor, sitting room, dining room, nursery, bath, kitchen and wash room. There are six bed-rooms on the second floor, all admirably lighted, and each provided with a closet. The wood work on the lower floor is of native cherry, finished in hard oil and varnish. On the second floor walnut is used, finished in the same manner. All the rooms, except closets and kitchen, are covered with elaborate wall and ceiling decorations. The floors are covered with Brussels or ingrain carpeting, the carpet on each room, in color and figure, being made to harmonize with the wall paper and furniture of the room. There is a stained glass transom over the main entrance, and similar windows over the stair case in the vestibule. The lamps in the main hall-way are provided with colored globes. The exterior is painted a dark brown with cream colored trimmings, presenting a most pleasing appearance. A beautiful porch extends the entire length of the north front, while smaller porticos are placed on the east and west sides. These porches with the projections in the body of the building form a most attractive and symetrical exterior. The whole is surmounted with a slate roof.

But the house was not built simply to please the eye. It is admirably arranged for comfort and convenience also. It is heated by the hot water system. The furnace in the basement is one of the Detroit Heating and Lighting Co's make. Hard coal is the fuel used. Pipes run to every room above and below stairs and in each rooms is a register; also one in the vestibule. The register in the dining room has a warming closet. The bath is provided with both hot and cold water. The entire house is thus kept at an average temperature of about seventy degrees. The sitting room also has an open grate fire place suited for hard or soft coal, which can be used for an occasional fire at any season of the year. For lighting, gas is used, the apparatus being one of the Combination Gas Machine Co's. The system of generating gas is not expensive and is very easily managed. The usual big clumsy cook stove which absorbs about half the kitchen room is discarded, and a neat little cooker is substituted run by the same gas that is used for lighting purposes. The man—or woman—who builds the kitchen fire in the morning has only to strike a match and the fire is lighted. There are 42 burners in the entire house, every room and hall being provided with either side lights or a chandelier and some with both. The doctor has a connection with the local telephone exchange and also has an instrument on his celery farm, giving him easy communication between the two, which he finds a great convenience in the summer season.

The work was all done by the day, probably 50 different men being employed on the job from first to last. Theo Crane was employed as superintendent, and the hands worked under his supervision. Except the heating and lighting apparatus and the slate for the roof, the materials were all bought here in Tecumseh. Mr. Bacon, the architect, inspected the house after its completion and pronounced it one of the best built and finished dwellings he ever saw.

We confess that we sympathize with the ambition of a man, upon whom fortune has smiled in his financial ventures, who desires to make a nice home for himself and to improve the town in which he lives. Dr. Stewart first risked his money and time in the experiment of celery raising. He made a success of it and opened up a lucrative field of business for himself and many others. He is blessed with an accomplished wife and a family of bright children. No man in Tecumseh better deserves a beautiful home. May he live long to enjoy it.

Finding that my readers are persistent in confusing "T. B. F." with the name of F. J. Boyd, simply because two of the initials happen to be the same, I re-assert what I said in the News of Jan. 24th, that Mr Boyd has nothing to do with editing these items. To avoid any further mistakes on account of my signature, I sign myself.

Arthur Hall gave us a call Monday morning on his way to Lansing and Charlotte where he will visit old friends.

Miss Minnie Pierson, of North Adams, visited school Tuesday morning.

HARRISON HASTING TOO SLOWLY

To Please the People Whose Toes Are Cold—Some Appointments That Are Looked For—A Story About the President and Dudley That Halford Says Is a Lie—Campaign Reminiscence Relating to Harrison's Mail—Flourney on the Negro.

WASHINGTON CITY, March 16.—The adjournment of the senate until Monday has given the president an opportunity to look around him and select a list of appointees for the senators to talk about next week. But the gossip as to who those lucky ones will be goes right along, and the impatience of those who want to see their state "recognized," is, if anything, on the increase. This is particularly the case with the Illinois delegation, if reports are to be credited. One prominent Illinoisan is said to have poured into the ear of Secretary Halford a very vigorous complaint, which he wound up by expressing a hope that at least he would be permitted to name the postmaster in his own town.

The fight wages very warm on public printer. The list from which the appointment will be made is as follows: August Donath, of Chester, Pa.; Capt. W. M. Meredith, of Chicago; Capt. Holloway, of Indianapolis; ex-Congressman Nichols, of North Carolina; Maj. A. Z. S. Davis, of Minneapolis, and Mr. Osborne, of Los Angeles, Cal. The Californians are pushing their man and are hopeful, not to say sanguine, of success; but they are, like the others, without any assurance from the president.

In fact that is what troubles the most of the politicians who are here with the purpose of looking after the interests of their friends. The president is a good listener, but never commits himself until the official list is sent to the senate. He hears what his callers have to say, and beyond a remark that plainly implies that there are two or three other people who are just as anxious as his callers, says nothing to indicate who is going to draw the prize.

Among the new names now put forward for a place is that of Stephen A. Douglas, who is named for a district attorneyship in Illinois. He has strong backing. All but one of the judges of Cook county have indorsed him, the exception being Judge Collins, who is for Maj. Adair. Leonard Swett, Robert T. Lincoln and many other prominent and influential men have written personal letters to the president and the attorney general on behalf of Mr. Douglas, who is also recommended by Rev. Dr. Barrows, of whose church he is a member, and by Rev. Dr. McPherson.

It is said that in the fight for collector of the port of Chicago, both the senators and Hon. Joseph Medill have declared against Mr. Nixon, of The Inter Ocean.

Just now the chances for the internal revenue commissionership favor Mason, of West Virginia, which will still further disgruntle the Illinois men. Corporal Tanner is leading for pension commissioner.

Mr. Clarkson, the newly confirmed first assistant postmaster general, arrived at the department shortly before 12 o'clock yesterday. He was received by Col. Stevenson and the oath was administered to him by Judge Lawrenson. He was then introduced to the employes of the office.

Col. Stevenson will leave for home next week. He has a new card which he is passing around to his friends, as follows: "A. E. Stevenson, late assistant postmaster general, lawyer, Bloomington, Ills. Mr. Stevenson will practice in the United States courts at Springfield and Chicago."

Gen. Nathan Goff, who has been trying to get his seat as governor of West Virginia, and to straighten up affairs there, has returned to Washington, and had an interview with the president yesterday.

It is said that the president's choice for the English mission is Chauncey Depew, but that at the suggestion of New Yorkers he has been considering the names of Evarts, Warner Miller's friends think he deserves this mission, but if he can not have it the way ought to be opened for him to reach the senate by sending Evarts to England. It is believed that Evarts does not want to leave the senate, that Warner Millers's chances for the mission are not very good, and that Depew will probably take the prize. Blaine's choice is still said to be Reid, but he would be quite willing to compromise on Depew rather than cause any rupture in his relations with the president. Depew's friends say he would accept the place if it was offered to him.

There is a growing belief that Fred Grant will not be appointed minister to China. Both the president and Mr. Blaine are said to have expressed the opinion that the office requires a bigger man in the present emergency. The Chinese restriction act and China's claim for indemnity from our government will require that the United States representative there be a man of experience in diplomacy and a man of ability and tact, and the administration dislikes to intrust so important a mission to Col. Grant. He may get some other position, however, less responsible.

It is said that Justice Matthews of the United States supreme court will retire on account of ill-health next May and that Judge Walter Q. Gresham, of Indiana, will be appointed his successor. The justice is improving in health at this time.

Another rumor current is to the effect that Russell Harrison has political aspirations and hopes to become United States senator from Montana.

THE PRESIDENT AND DUDLEY.

An Interesting Yarn Current Regarding Their Relations—A Robust Denial.

WASHINGTON CITY, March 16.—There has been current of late in political circles a piece of gossip, said to be well verified, which has caused a great deal of comment. It is stated that a few after the president arrived in Washington a note was sent by Private Secretary Halford to Col. W. W. Dudley, to the effect that the president sympathized deeply with him on account of the criticism and obloquy cast upon him by reason of his alleged "blocks of five" letter, but requested him not to call or attempt any personal communication, as it might embarrass the incoming administration. Col. Dudley piqued and chagrined, replied that he was not in need of sympathy from any one; that he had done nothing of which he was ashamed, and that he had no favors to ask. At the inauguration ball Col. and Mrs. Dudley met face to face the president and Mrs. Harrison and were presented with hundreds of others. The president greeted Col. Dudley as if he were a perfect stranger, but after hesitating a moment presented Mrs. Dudley to Mrs. Harrison. Much ill-feeling among the Republicans is said to have grown out of these circumstances.

The above story was pronounced by most who heard it to be too absurd to obtain credence anywhere, but as it was published in Philadelphia and Baltimore, Mr. Halford was asked about it yesterday. He replied: "That's a lie, pure and simple."

HARRISON'S CAMPAIGN MAIL.

Forty-Five Bags of It Sent Out by a Patent Medicine Man.

BUFFALO, N. Y., March 16.—A report to the effect that a former employe postoffice named Mundella, who asserts that he was discharged because he refused to aid in hindering the transit of Gen. Harrison's correspondence, and that he conceived and proposed to Gen. Harrison the plan of sending his mail to Dr. Pierce's Medical dispensary, Buffalo, to be mailed like patent medicine correspondence, and that this was done, was shown to Dr. Pierce yesterday morning.

"Yes, it is true that a large number of Harrison campaign documents were sent out in my mail last fall," said the doctor. "I don't know who this man Mundella is, but I know who wrote to me about it. The documents were the affidavits of labor men and other printed matter concerning the attitude of Gen. Harrison toward labor interests. There were about forty-five bags in all, and as it was but a few days before election they did not care to trust them in the Indianapolis postoffice and shipped them to me by express stamped ready to go. They were thrown into our mail, and sent out as our own business matter."

THE NEGRO PROBLEM.

A Virginian's View as to How It Will Be Solved.

BALTIMORE, March 16.—A special from Richmond, Va., says: Secretary of the Commonwealth Henry W. Flourney made a speech Thursday night before the Powhattan, Richmond's crack Democratic club. His theme was "The Negro Problem." Mr. Flourney, in the course of his remarks said he believed that the solution of this great question would be the final disfranchisement of the colored man. This, he believed, would be brought about by northern men settling in the south and realizing the true condition of affairs and creating a sentiment in its favor in the north.

Touching the issue in the coming campaign in this state the speaker declared the race question should overshadow every other. "If," said he, "I were the chairman of the Democratic state committee I would kick out of the party any speaker who alluded to the debt or the tariff."

EDITOR DAWSON SLAIN.

Murder of the Well-Known Southern Journalist.

CHARLESTON, S. C., March 13.—Capt. F. W. Dawson, editor of The News and Courier, and agent of the Associated Press in this city, was murdered Tuesday afternoon about 2:30 o'clock by T. B. McDow, a physician of this city. It seems that McDow, who is a married man and the father of a family, had been too familiar with a Swiss maid in Capt. Dawson's family, and that Capt. Dawson had visited McDow at his office to remonstrate with him. Words and blows followed, and the encounter ended in McDow shooting Capt. Dawson through the heart. The murderer then locked up his office and went out. Three hours later he surrendered himself to the police authorities, and the body of the murdered man was found lying in McDow's office. The murder caused intense excitement, and there is talk of lynching.

CHARLESTON, S. C., March 14.—The murder of Capt. Dawson is still the topic on every tongue, and deep indignation is felt against Dr. McDow. Circumstances tend to confirm the belief that the killing was cold-blooded and without provocation. Investigation of the doctor's office shows that he tried to conceal the crime by burying the body of his victim in a closet under the outside stairway at the rear of his office. He had tried to dig a hole in the earth here but it was too hard and he gave it up and afterward surrendered himself, claiming that he shot Dawson in self-defense. He alleges that he was knocked down and struck twice over the head with a cane, but there are no marks of violence or bruises on his person.

McDow's house is in the hands of the police. After the murder was committed McDow's wife, with whom he had a serious quarrel on the day of the tragedy, fled from the house, taking her baby with her.

Messages of sympathy have been pouring in upon Mrs. Dawson since yesterday from all parts of the country. Ex-President Cleveland telegraphed: "I am shocked by the death of your husband, and I sadly tender you my heartfelt sympathy and condolence."

The funeral yesterday afternoon was attended by an immense crowd, representing all classes of the community. The funeral took place at the Cathedral chapel. The services were conducted by Bishop Northrope, of the diocese of Charleston, who was assisted by Bishop John Moore, of the diocese of St. Augustine, Fla.

ANOTHER BOILER EXPLOSION.

Five Men Lose Their Lives and Half a Dozen Wounded.

PITTSBURG, Pa., March 15.—A battery of boilers at the West Point Boiler works of R. Monroe & Sons, at the corner of Twenty-third and Smallman streets, exploded shortly after noon yesterday, completely wrecking the plant and burying a number of men in the ruins. A rescue party at once set to work to recover the dead and relieve the living, and by 2 p. m. all had been taken from the ruins. The dead are: August Lindebaugh, engineer, frightfully mangled; Charles Allenbacke, laborer, head and body burned; Daniel Clark, boiler-maker, mangled; John Remheimer, boiler-maker, scalded; James Carton, helper.

The names of the most seriously injured are: John Forest, helper; Harvey Barr, helper; William Kelly, John Barber, James Cartney, Frank Maneske.

The explosion occurred just after the noon whistle had sounded and many of the workmen had left the works to get their dinners. The concussion shook buildings for several squares. In a few minutes a crowd had gathered about the wreck and the scene was a heartrending one. Wives, mothers and children ran about wringing their hands and weeping, eagerly searching for their loved ones.

The boilers were inspected six months ago and were thought to be in first-class condition. The real cause of the explosion will probably never be known, as the engineer was killed outright and no one else has been found who was in the engine room at the time the disaster took place.

The fight is to come off inside of five months, within 100 miles of New York and is for $2,500 a side, fifty men on a side to be present.

Fire Damp Kills Sixteen Colliers.

PARIS, March 16.—An explosion of fire damp took place in a colliery near Nimes, in the department of Gard, yesterday, by which fifteen persons were killed and six wounded.

Michigan Legislature.

LANSING, Mich., March 7.—The joint resolution providing for the extension of the existence of the life of certain corporations by an amendment to the constitution went through the legislature yesterday. It is of vital interest to the owners of $100,000,000 of capital. The vote on the amendment will be taken in April. Another constitutional amendment resolution passed submits to the people the proposition to raise the governor's salary to $4,000 per annum.

LANSING, Mich., March 8.—The house passed concurrent resolutions yesterday for a committee of investigation of the cause of the death of two patients at the Pontiac asylum, which the press has declared were caused by cruel treatment. Bills were passed authorizing the incorporation of gas and oil pipe-line companies, and to provide penalties for fraudulent concealment of goods covered by mortgage. The hall of the representatives was occupied last night by a woman's suffrage meeting, the speakers urging the legislature to pass the bill granting municipal suffrage to women.

LANSING, Mich., March 9.—The house yesterday passed a resolution authorizing an examination of the claim of H. H. Hawley for $100 bounty money offered by the state for volunteers. If the claim is sustained it will benefit hundreds of ex-soldiers. The bill giving Detroit women the right to vote for school inspectors and to hold that office was also passed. The senate committee on the Dickerson-Rentz contested election case reported in favor of Rentz, the Democrat.

Michigan Burglars Bagged.

BELLAIRE, Mich., March 6.—Burglars blew open the safe in Cook & Co.'s hardware store early Tuesday morning. The doors were blown to pieces and the contents damaged, the money being destroyed by the explosion. Citizens tracked the thieves in the snow and overtook a man near Central lake, who registered at the hotel here Sunday as Frank Howard, of Bay City. Howard showed fight and emptied one revolver at his pursuers, one ball striking Town Treasurer Adams, inflicting a serious wound. Howard took to the woods and Adams was brought to Bellaire. Another party started after Howard and when cornered he again pulled a gun, but finally surrendered.

THE GREAT REMEDY FOR PAIN

INFLAMMATORY RHEUMATISM.

UTTERLY HELPLESS AND CURED.

FROMPTLY. PERMANENTLY.

The "St. Louis Post-Dispatch" says: "Mrs. Phebe Rice, 1806 Madison Street, states that for the past seven years she had been a sufferer from acute inflammatory rheumatism, which had affected the muscles of the hands, contracting them so badly she could not comb her hair, hold a needle or pick up a pin, and rendered the lower limbs so helpless she required crutches to move about. During ten months she was obliged to carry the right hand in a sling.

"A single application of St. Jacobs Oil, she says, made her a firm believer in its virtues, as the effect was instantaneous and she was greatly benefited. She continued use of it brought her to the happy condition in which the reporter saw her, with the free use of her limbs and in perfect health—cured. She can now run up and down stairs, she said, and her hands were as useful in every respect as they had been before she began to suffer, seven years ago."

THE PRICE.—The best always first and cheapest. The best is the promptest, safest, surest, most permanent. The benefits are beyond price. St. Jacobs Oil is the best.

BLIND BARTIMÆUS.

LESSON XII., FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, MARCH 24.

Text of the Lesson, Mark x. 46-59—Commit to Memory Verses 51, 52—Golden Text, Mark x. 48—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

46. "And they came to Jericho." Jesus is drawing near to Jerusalem, there to accomplish that decease or exodus of which Moses and Elijah talked on the mount of transfiguration and of which He Himself had so often spoken (John ii, 19-21; Matt. xii, 39, 40; Mark viii, 31; ix, 31; x, 33, 34, 45); the death prefigured in all the sacrifices since the Lord God first clothed Adam and Eve with the coats of skins (Gen. iii, 21); the atonement which provides the only salvation for sinners, sufficient for the sins of the whole world, efficient for all who receive it.

How many interesting incidents are connected with the history of Jericho since we first hear of it in connection with the encamping of Israel in the plains of Moab, on this side Jordan, by Jericho (Num. xxii, 1). The three fold parting of the waters of Jordan; the new captain of the Lord's host under whom Joshua so meekly took his position, and the miraculous falling of the walls of Jericho, the salvation of Rahab and her kindred, the translation of Elijah and the healing of the waters by Elisha. The name "Jericho" (according to Young) signifies "fragrant," and surely these incidents in its history give forth the fragrance of Him who is the Captain of our salvation, the all powerful healer and deliverer. Four times is it called "the city of palm trees" (Deut. xxxiv, 3; Judg. i, 16; iii, 13; II Chron. xxviii, 15) and the associations of the palm tree in the Scriptures form a most interesting, profitable and practical Bible study, reaching from the palm trees of Elim (Ex. xv, 27) to the palms of the redeemed in glory (Rev. vii, 9).

"As He went out of Jericho." Luke says that He healed a blind man as He came nigh to Jericho, and that He then entered and passed through (Luke xviii, 35; xix, 1), Matthew says that as they departed from Jericho there were two blind men sitting by the wayside, and that He healed them both (Matt. xx, 29-34), these accounts read in the simplest way seem to indicate that there were three blind men healed at this time, one as He entered Jericho and two as He left it, Bartimæus being one of the two. There is no need to attempt to reconcile these accounts so as to try and make out that Jesus healed at this time only one or two blind men, there is nothing here to reconcile except our hearts to the Saviour, and that we become as little children, believing what He says.

"Blind Bartimæus, the son of Timæus." The one name explains the other, Bar signifying a son as in Matt. xvi, 17; Acts, iv, 36. We are not often told the names of those who were healed, and just why we should be told the name of this blind man is somewhat of a mystery. What an honor to have his name recorded in this Book of Books and handed down to all generations as one whom Jesus healed; but think of the greater honor of having our names written in Heaven. (Lu. x, 20.)

"Sat by the highway side begging." Only a poor blind beggar, picture of utter helplessness, having nothing and unable to do anything but piteously ask alms of those who were passing by; what a picture of the sinner, wretched and miserable, and poor and blind and naked (Rev. iii, 17), but if sinners were only as sensible of their blindness and poverty as Bartimæus, how good it would be for them.

47. "He heard that it was Jesus of Nazareth." He had ofter heard of Him, for His fame had spread over all the land, and as he listened to the reports of His wondrous works, making the deaf to hear, the dumb to speak, the blind to see, the lame to walk, the sick to be whole, and even the dead to live again, he became convinced that this was none other than the one of whom the prophets had spoken and foretold that He would do these very things (Isa. xxxv, 5, 6), longing, no doubt, in his heart that some day Jesus might pass that way so that he might cry unto Him and be healed, for he had heard that it was written in the Scriptures. "He shall deliver the needy when he crieth; the poor also, and him that hath no helper." (Ps. lxxii, 12.)

"He began to cry out, and say, Jesus, Son of David, have mercy on me." Would it be strange if, as he heard the crowd approaching, he inwardly felt that the day of his deliverance had come, and nervously asked, Who is it? What is coming? Then as they told him that it was Jesus, with what earnestness he must have cried out. Here was the opportunity he had longed for, the Mighty One of Israel was at hand, and he must cry unto Him; to do otherwise would indicate either indifference or unbelief.

48. "Many charged him that he should hold his peace." As well tell a man who is drowning, or in the third or fourth story of a burning building with no apparent means of escape, to hold his peace; as well tell this man that he is not blind, and poor, and needy, or that Jesus can't stop to attend to beggars. He knows better, he has long realized his sad condition and he believes that Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of David, is a deliverer for just such as he, and therefore they cannot shut him up, but their efforts to do so only make him cry the more a great deal that the Son of David would have mercy on him.

49. "Jesus stood still and commanded him to be called." Blessed Jesus, hearer of the cry of the needy, Thou dost not respect the rich because of his riches, nor despise the poor because of his poverty. The poor man's importunity has prevailed and the Lord of Heaven and earth stops.

50. "He, casting away his garment, rose and came to Jesus." The Revised Version says that he "sprang up;" he lost no time, and that he might not be hindered, he casts aside his outer garment and quickly came to Jesus.

51. "What wilt thou that I should do unto thee?" They are now face to face, the helper and the helpless, the Almighty and the undone, and these are the words of Jesus to the beseeching and expectant heart of the poor blind beggar. It is written that Ahasuerus said to the queen, "What wilt thou, Queen Esther? and what is thy request? it shall be even given thee to the half of the kingdom" (Esth. v, 3); and also that Solomon gave to the queen of Sheba all her desire, whatsoever she asked (II Chron. ix, 12); but a greater than either of these kings is here, even the same who said to Solomon that night at Gibeon, "Ask what I shall give thee." (II Chron. i, 7.) The same who says to us, "If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you." (John xv, 7.)

"The blind man said unto Him, Lord, that I might receive my sight." He did not say I am slow of speech, I cannot speak before this multitude, I cannot find words to tell my need, but simply, definitely and in few words he tells his need. The most helpful prayer meetings I ever attended were those where the prayers consisted of but two or three sentences right from the heart, telling out the real felt need of the soul, and many such prayers in quick succession.

IN THE SLEEPING CAR.

In the evening, weak and weary,
Entered I the sleeping car;
Found the porter half asleep,
As at eve the porters are.

Up and down the aisle he bossed me,
Flung my baggage here and there;
In my every wish he crossed me
Till my soul o'erflowed with swear.

Long I sued, implored, beseeched him,
"Give me quarters for the night,"
Till at last my importunings reached him
And he folded me from sight.

In the morning, ah! how lowly
Bowed the porter down to me!
Brushed my garments, meantime slowly,
Placed his palm where I might see.

Thus between mankind and porter
Time is ever shifting powers:
In the eve we beg their quarters,
In the morn they tog for ours.

—Washington Post.

A MISTAKEN IDENTITY

Four or five mules had been stolen in and about Glen Cove, and the thief had been sharp enough and lucky enough to get off with them. The mountain people lose a razor backed hog now and then and raise no row, but when a thief has the nerve to come along and run off a mule the situation assumes a serious aspect. The bulwarks of American liberty totter to their foundation, as it were, and it is high time that the American eagle be unchained and encouraged to scream his loudest. Every farmer in the Cove was out at night and on the watch, and although they may have differed on religion and politics, all were agreed as to what should be done with the thief in case he returned after more mule meat and was captured.

The above can be imagined as scene first. Scene second opens with your humble servant approaching Glen Cove at 10 o'clock of a starlight night. If I could have had my way about it I should have done the approaching act several hours earlier; but a towheaded boy who was carrying 50,000 freckles on his face gave me a wrong steer on a short cut, and I was lost for two or three hours. I had heard nothing of the excitement at the Cove, and felt no fear except of the farmer's dogs. The first building I came to looked to me like a large log house, and I turned off the trail and approached it. I was close up before discovering that it was a barn. I was about to turn away when several men stepped into view and a hearty voice sung out:

"Throw up yer hands or we'll riddle ye!"

The man who won't throw up his hands sooner than be riddled must want to get out of this world by a painful process.

"Now, then, some of ye tie him! Look out fur tricks. If he'un makes a move, be ready to bore him!"

I didn't attempt any tricks, and when they had tied my hands behind me and fastened a leading rope around my body, the leader said:

"We'll take him down to Crocker's and see if Jim's boy kin identify."

There were five sturdy mountaineers, each armed with a gun, and I wasn't saying a word. I realized the situation by the help of some remarks dropped as we passed along, and I felt that it was useless to protest until the proper moment came. About ten rods below Crocker's house was a fine, large tree, and as we passed it the leader of the band remarked:

"We'll dangle he'un from that ar' limb up thar."

It was a nice, large limb, growing at a convenient height, and I would no doubt present a good appearance while doing the dangling act.

What may be called scene third took place at Crocker's. A gun was fired as we arrived, and in the course of a quarter of an hour five more farmers arrived. They had been out on watch also, and this was the signal to rally. It was while waiting for this rally that I asked one of those who had captured me:

"Do you suspect me of any crime? Are you looking for a robber or murderer?"

"Suspect! In course we suspect!" he replied.

"But isn't it possible that you have made a mistake?"

"Reckon not; but we can soon find out. Crocker's boy Jim got a fa'r sight of he'un by daylight, and he'll tell."

"Very well. If the boy says he ever saw me in these parts before you may go ahead and hang."

Great was the rejoicing when the other party arrived. Not a man of them had the least doubt that I was the party wanted, and two of them insisted that valuable time could be saved by hanging me at once.

"Yes, that's so," replied the leader, "but we'd cut the fun too short. Better save he'un for an hour or two. Bring him into the house."

Crocker's boy Jim was a lad of 12, and I no sooner laid eyes on him than I felt a presentiment of evil. He had been routed out of bed to identify me as the person he had seen hiding in the woods on the day the last mule was stolen. He made short work of it. He looked at me for ten seconds and then said:

"He's he'un! I'll sw'ar to it on forty Bibles!"

"Dead shore?" asked the leader.

"Yes."

"That's 'nuff! Up he goes!"

It was high time for me to do some talking. I told them who I was, the route I had come, the people I had met, and I asked them to look over my papers. They said it would be throwing time away, and that it was selfish in me to want to delay matters, and I guess they would have had their way about it but for Mrs. Crocker. As they started to lead me out doors she said:

"Look yere, boys, don't make no mistake. Our Jim may hev mistook. He'un tells a smooth story, and it may be right. It hain't but fo' miles back to Dobson's, whar he says he took supper, and one of ye' should ride over."

The men grumbled and growled, but it was finally decided that one of them should go. I was seated on a rude stool, the rope tied fast about my legs, and we sat there to await the return of the messenger. Jim was questioned again and again, but he stuck to his first declaration. I could give them my route for the last three weeks, and the name of every town, village and cove, and I had letters to prove I had been to those places. But for young Jim being so sure of my identity, I could have convinced them. They were doing the fair thing, however, by sending a messenger back, and I had no fears of the result. It was daylight before he returned, and he had two men with him. During the interval I was examined, cross examined and turned wrong side out. The greatest doubter was an old man who had lost his two mules.

"Look at he'un," he exclaimed, pointing at me as I sat there. "Look at the build of his head—the look on his face—them suspishus eyes. He might fule a young man, but he needn't try it on me. Whar's my mewls, ye onery villain?"

Ten minutes after the men rode up I was cast loose and apologized to. I could realize how naturally the mistake came about, and the men were not to blame. It was all right with everybody except young Jim and the old man. The latter had bragged of his cuteness, and his defeat annoyed him. He went off shaking his head and predicting that I was up to some trick. I had forgotten the boy when, half an hour after breakfast, I heard a terrible racket behind the corn crib. Word came that I was wanted, and I went out to find Jim tied by the leg and his father trimming the second "gad."

"Now, sonny," said the father as he got ready to use it, "take a good look at that 'ere stump befo' ye. Two days hence ye may be axed to identify it, and ye may sw'ar up and down that it's a blooming cheery tree! You jist cum powerful nigh o' gettin' all this cove in a scrape, and I'm a-goin' to improve yer eye sight!"

And Jim received the nicest, most thorough and lasting licking ever given to a boy south of the Ohio river.—M. Quad in Detroit Free Press.

Gen. Stark at Bennington.

All day long the rain fell in torrents, and while the Germans began throwing up intrenchments, Stark laid his plans for storming their position on the morrow. During the night a company of Berkshire militia arrived, and with them the excellent Mr. Allen, the warlike parson of Pittsfied, who went up to Stark and said: "Colonel, our Berkshire people have been often called out to no purpose, and if you don't let them fight now they will never turn out again." "Well," said Stark, "would you have us turn out now, while it is pitch dark and raining buckets?" "No, not just this minute," replied the minister. "Then," said the doughty Stark, "as soon as the Lord shall once more send us sunshine, if I don't give you fighting enough, I'll never ask you to come out again!"—John Fiske in Atlantic.

A Parrot's Power.

A young delivery clerk in a Westchester grocery attempted to spark a servant girl in the kitchen the other evening. The young woman objected, and, turning off the gas, went into another part of the house, leaving the would be masher in the kitchen in darkness. As a mode of revenge he determined to kiss the girl the next time he went to the house. The following day, after he had emptied the basket, the grocer's Lothario seized the girl and was in a fair way to get in his kiss when a poll parrot, who had observed the proceeding from its perch in a cage overhead, cried out with surprising distinctness, "Mistress, mistress, man got Mary! man got Mary!" The young clerk let go in a hurry and hasn't been seen around that house since.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

She Loves Flowers.

One would not think that a lady of the stage, so wandering as Miss Davenport, would be so quiet and home like in her tastes as to prefer gardening above all things. Her summers are spent at Canton, Pa., where she has a nice place that is renowned all the country round for its wealth of floriculture. These flowers Miss Davenport cultivates with her own fair hands, and bends over with her once portly but now attenuated physique. She is an authority on the question of flowers, and is passionately fond of books treating of that subject, her favorite author being Alphonse Karr.—New York Journal.

Delicate Treatment of Constituents.

The other day a western congressman came into the senate restaurant with two constituents, good men, but a little rustic in appearance and manners and unused to conventionalities and points of etiquette that are unknown in Wayback. The restaurant was full of ladies and gentlemen. As the congressman seated himself he, of course, removed his hat. A moment or two later he noticed that his untutored friends had not removed their hats. He hastily put his own hat back on his head and wore it during the meal. Chesterfield could not have done anything finer than that.—Washington Post.

A Piano Playing Monkey.

The latest prodigy at the piano is reported to be a quadrumane—a monkey, to wit—that executes morceaux brilliantly with all four hands at once, while he gracefully turns over the leaves of the music with the tip of his prehensile tail. It is not stated whether or not the music has been specially written for him a quatre mains; perhaps he simply duplicates what has been written for ordinary two handed players of the Rubinstein order. The achievements of this wonderful ape surely mark a new and most important epoch in the arrangement of the orchestra.—London Court Journal.

Baldness.

As our readers are already aware from the discussions which have already appeared in Science, various theories have been proposed to account for the baldness which prevails to such an extent in civilized countries. A Swiss writer attributes it to a microscopic fungus, which, however, he has not as yet been able to describe or indeed to discover. He thinks that barbers should be compelled to disinfect their combs and brushes.—Science.

WHAT OR WHERE

Is the reason people will not, can not, or do not see any difference in cheap nostrums put up by Cheap John houses or irresponsible parties at enormous profits, rather than take a medicine of world wide reputation and one that is giving universal satisfaction at equal price? No medicine in the world is giving such unparalleled satisfaction for purifying the blood as BEGGS' BLOOD PURIFIER & BLOOD MAKER, and every bottle that does not do its work will cost you nothing.

LONG LIFE.

There is nothing in the world more generally desired than long life, yet the majority of people put off caring for their health—not because they are really careless, but because we live our lives at such a pace we have not time to give the subject sufficient thought until we recive a reminder in the shape of a severe illness.

Then, too, we are constantly bewildered by the various schools of medicine, and the physicians who represent them, and often blunder in our choice of a doctor.

If people only knew that the very best health-keeper, life-preserver, and disease-preventer that has yet been discovered, is simered down into a concentrated and very palatable form in the shape of New Style Pleasant Taste Vinegar Bitters, they would not hesitate a moment to try it.

But they do not know. How can they know, when so many not only worthless, but positively injurious drugs are constantly flooding the market under various names and guises, that the New Style Vinegar Bitters is as bad as any of them.

They do not know, of course, unless they have courage to try the New Style. It straightens out a tangled-up system in a very short while, and those who buy it once buy it always.

Why dont you try it, reader? It is sent out by a responsible house, and is exactly as represented. It costs but one dollar for a very large bottle. Try it at once and you will never be so glad of anything in your life. Your druggists may not have it, but he will order it for you. Be sure it says New Style Pleasant Taste on carton and bottle before you take it. Try it, and you will feel happier than if you had found a gold mine—of health.

Free from alcohol and opium; composed of expensive herbs and roots, with a fine, delicate flavoring.

The Boomers' Road.

It Seems To Be a Hard One to Travel.

OKLAHOMA SETTLERS DRIVEN OUT.

United States Troops Descend Upon Those Who Went Down to Possess the Land of Promise, and Blast Their Hopes for the Second Time—The Sharper Pursuing His Avocation—Statements for the Restless to Reflect Upon.

WICHITA, Kan., March 18.—The boomers were in a frightful state of demoralization Saturday. Friday night the news reached Oklahoma City that the troops were en route from Fort Reno to drive them out of the country. They fled in terror to the woods and bushes taking with them all their valuables. The soldiers, under command of Lieut. Carson, arriving at noon, commenced to search for the boomers, beating the bushes and scouring the woods. They soon gathered quite a body—men, women, and children—and driving them before them, started for the Kansas line. Houses, tents, claim foundations, and marks were destroyed. It is said that Hill has been arrested. No excuse was received and all found without permits were taken. Capt. Hays started also from the Cherokee strip with troop K and intends to carry before him to the south all the boomers he finds.

People in this region are anxiously awaiting the action of congress in opening up Oklahoma for settlement. Maps of Oklahoma are in every store window, and each one is surrounded by a crowd of eager gazers from morning until night. Strangers are flocking into the city from all directions and in all imaginable ways; some in prairie schooners, some in palace cars, others via the freight train and walking route. In Purcell, a small town on the South Canadian river, in the Chickasaw nation, just south of Oklahoma in Indian territory, fully 4,000 people are encamped awaiting the president's proclamation allowing them to enter. Along the Kansas border there are fully 4,000 more people. Taken altogether they make a curious and motley crowd. There is the old westerner, who never has a permanent stopping-place, but wanders around from town to town; there is the small eastern farmer who wants to better his condition; there is the mechanic, the mercant, the professional man, and the claim-jumper.

This last unprincipled species is numerous. A "shark" game that is being worked like a bonanza by its originators is the town lot scheme. Several of these combinations have been organized in Wichita, and more are being conceived. The modus operandi is to take a map of Oklahoma, pick a site and make it a town—in imagination. Options on the lots are then offered at $1 or $2 per certificate. One company alone has caught 1,700 victims, and more are still coming.

While Oklahoma may be and undoubtedly is a good country, the boom that is being worked up is nothing but a gigantic money-making scheme. "People have an idea," said Col. Matheson, for twenty-six years an Indian agent, now living in this place, "that Oklahoma is a land virtually flowing with milk and honey. There are a great many sweets in it, but they will find the extracting process bitter; they will also find it will be many wearisome days before the commission succeeds in inducing the Indians to relinquish their claim upon any part of the territory. By the different treaties, with every one of which I am cognizant, there is not an inch of soil to which the United States can lay claim. Oklahoma was originally intended for the occupancy of freed negroes, who had been held before the war as slaves by the Indians. The scheme did not materialize, and the country was taken possession of by the Creeks, Seminoles, Iowas, Kickapoos, Pottawatomies, and the Sacs and Foxes, who now claim ownership. Other portions of the land which the settlers want are occupied by the Osages, Cherokees, Poncas, Wichitas, and Pawnees."

There is land in Kansas, Nebraska, Arizona, and New Mexico—in fact any of the western states or territories—much superior to that in Indian territory. But Oklahoma has been boomed; everybody has the craze and wishes to go there.

The colonel intimated that some of the leaders were adventurers with everything to gain and nothing to lose. "All they care for," he said, "is the successful accomplishment of the scheme to enrich themselves out of the capital of the boom-crazed people, and they are doing it."

In Wichita, Topeka, Emporia, and all southern Kansas towns everything has been dead since the boom of two years ago. The crops have failed, trade is dull, and every one except the lucky real estate adventurer, who made his pile in the boom, is impoverished.

Indiana's State Treasury.

INDIANAPOLIS, March 16.—The financial condition of the state is leading to considerable trouble, as there is not a dollar available in the treasury, and no prospect of any for some weeks to come. State Treasurer Lemcke has asked the different county treasurers to make advanced payments of the amounts due the state on the May semi-annual settlements, so that, if he is not successful in procuring the loan of $700,000 authorized by the legislature, without delay, he will have some money for the payment of the salaries of the state officers and the expenses of the public institutions. This will require about $150,000.

The Right Kind of a Dog for Indiana.

CORYDON, Ind., March 16.—John Price has been awarded $50 damages against the Adams Express company for the loss of a dog. The only value of the animal, as sworn to by the plaintiff, was his great antipathy to white caps. He could scent them a mile away and keep his master's premises well guarded against their intrusion, making him an exceptionally valuable animal to a resident of Corydon.

Mary Anderson Seriously Ill.

PHILADELPHIA, March 18.—Mary Anderson will act no more this season. She was informed by her physician that in order to fully recover from the nervous prostration with which she has been suffering for a fortnight she would have to cancel all her engagements for the season and put herself under his care for a course of treatment.

Found Guilty of Murder.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., March 16.—The Journal's Boulder, M. T., special says: The jury in the Bryson murder case Saturday returned a verdict of murder in the first degree. Bryson came to Boulder from Minneapolis some months ago with Sophia Lind strom, and it is supposed for her money.

Engineer Cook Not Guilty.

MAUCH CHUNK, Pa., March 16—The jury in the case of Engineer Cook, in the Mud Run trial, after being out all night, Saturday morning returned a verdict of not guilty, and the county to pay the costs.

Deafness Can't be Cured

by local application, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucus lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is intirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflamation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucus surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that we can not cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circular, free.

In the Open Court of March 21, Prof. Edward D. Cope, of Philadelphia, will present some interesting considerations upon Ethical Evolution including a review of the extent and significance of the utilitarian doctrine of morals.

THE LATE Dr. Dio Lewis, in speaking of Warner's Safe Cure said, over his own signature: "If I found myself the victim of a serious kidney trouble, I would use Warner's Safe Cure." He also said "The medical profession stands dazed and helpless in the presence of more than one kidney malady."

Boils, pimples, hives, ringworm, tetter, and all other manifestations of impure blood are cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

IT is better to need relief than want a heart to give it. The relief you want for Catarrh you are certain to find it. WARNER'S LOG CABIN ROSE CREAM, an "old reliable" catarrh remedy. Give it a trial, only 50c.

That Tired Feeling

That extreme tired feeling which is so distressing and often so unaccountable in the spring months, is entirely overcome by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which tones the whole body, purifies the blood, cures scrofula and all humors, cures dyspepsia, creates an appetite, rouses the torpid liver, braces up the nerves, and clears the mind. We solicit a comparison of Hood's Sarsaparilla with any other blood purifier in the market for purity, economy, strength, and medicinal merit.

Everybody needs and should take a good spring medicine, for two reasons:

1st, The body is now more susceptible to benefit from medicine than at any other season.

2d, The impurities which have accumulated in the blood should be expelled, and the system given tone and strength, before the prostrating effects of warm weather are felt.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best spring medicine. A single trial will convince you of its superiority. Take it before it is too late.

Tired all the Time

"I had no appetite or strength, and felt tired all the time. I attributed my condition to scrofulous humor. I had tried several kinds of medicine without benefit. But as soon as I had taken half a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, my appetite was restored, and my stomach felt better. I have now taken nearly three bottles, and I never was so well." MRS. JESSIE F. DOLBEARE, Pascoag, R. I.

Mrs. C. W. Marriott, Lowell, Mass., was completely cured of sick headache, which she had 16 years, by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

The Best Spring Medicine

"I take Hood's Sarsaparilla for a spring medicine, and I find it just the thing. It tones up my system and makes me feel like a different man. FOUR NEW STATES

South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana, Washington.

On February 22, 1889, the President signed the bill creating South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana and Washington states of the Union.

South Dakota—The Great Profile State, to which the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has three lines, reaching Ellendale, Aberdeen, Huron, Watertown and Sioux Falls. Go to south Dakota via the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway and pass through St. Paul and Minneapolis en route.

North Dakota—Where is grown the No. 1 Hard Scotch Fife Wheat; whose healthful climate assures the most vigorous and brainy civilization on earth; where single counties raise more wheat, oats and barley than entire states; the soil of whose fertile prairies is deeper than the valley of the Nile; where the Turtle Mountain, Missouri and Devils Lake land districts invite the home seeker to secure a free home. Magnificent daily fr in service to Fargo, Grand Forks, Grafton, Devils Lake, Bottineau, and all other important points.

Montana the Golden—Treasures in her mines of precious metals; wealth in her 40,000,000 head of live stock; profit in her fertile land, producing a larger yield of crops than any other state or territory; the richest country per inhabitant on earth; where prosperity is universal; which has the best paid labor in the world; a balmy winter climate caused by warm winds from the Pacific. The St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway is the only railroad passing through a continuous agricultural country from St. Paul and Minneapolis to the Rocky Mountains. It runs through the great Reservation of 18,000,000 acres of land, free to settlers, in the Milk River Valley. Wood, water and coal in abundance; no irrigation required; the only line passing through Great Falls with its 1,000,000 horse power cataracts; immense coal veins, and surrounding farming country of free land; through Helena, the capital city and commercial center of Montana, and Butte, the richest mining camp on earth, to San Francisco by the Columbia River Valley, Portland and Shasta Route or Ogden, Utah, to California points. Remember this is the only line running dining cars, sleeping cars and free colonists sleepers of its own to from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Great Falls, Helena and Butte. It is also the shortest line to Butte.

Washington—The country of tall timbers, indented by Puget Sound, the Mediterranean of the Pacific. Do not forget that the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railroad is the only line which offers a choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. The Manitoba-Pacific route is the only line by which passengers enroute for Tacoma, Portland and San Francisco can pass thro' Port Townsend and Seattle. Free colonist sleepers run through without change or delay. Distance to the Pacific coast is the same as by other lines, but prices of tickets are five and ten dollars less. Take the Seattle route.

We can assure the Adrian club that Mr. Palmer can be depended upon while behind the bat, and will sooner or later be beyond their control, as he has a record that stands No. 1 in the country, as a catcher.

An Imperative Necessity

What pure air is to an unhealthy locality, what spring cleaning is to the neat house-keeper, so is Hood's Sarsaparilla to every-body, at this season. Scrofula, Salt Rheum, and all other blood disorders are cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, the most popular and successful spring medicine.

Our Union School seems to be enjoying an era of undisturbed prosperity through the efficient management of Prof. Hopkins. If anything happens to disturb its equanimity it is quelled before it reaches the eyes or ears of those outside the school walls. Mr. Hopkins has shown himself to be one of those men who possess the faculty of managing their business without any outside assistance, and that is the kind of a superintendent that our school has needed for some time.

A Chicago patent medicine company advertising Star Nervine, paraded our streets Monday, and gave a free show at Town Hall in the evening. It seemed to be very much enjoyed by some, especially those whose teeth were extracted without pain.

It will consist of vocal and instrumental music from the best local talent, and Mrs. Josie St. John of Detroit, whom all remember as a Clinton girl, and who has lately so highly distinguished herself in Detroit musical circles, has consented to assist them. The musical part of the program will be interspersed with recitations. A full program will appear shortly.

COUGH! and COUGH? and COUGH!?

What in the world is the reason you will cough and keep coughing and still keep trying inferior medicines when BEGGS' CHERRY COUGH SYRUP will positively relieve your cough at once? This is no advertising scheme, but an actual fact, and we guarantee it. J. J. ORR, Druggist.

TWO MURDERERS HUNG.

The Barrett Boys Pay the Penalty for Tollefson's Death.

ST. PAUL, Minn., March 23.—Pete and Tim Barrett were hanged at 11:14 o'clock yesterday morning. Strenuous efforts were made to get the sentence of Pete commuted to imprisonment for life, but Governor Merriam refused to interfere. The execution was witnessed by 300 people. The prisoners had their nerve with them to the last and both died game. They shot a street car driver named Tollefson in Minneapolis, on the night of July 27, 1887. The only other hanging that ever took place in this county was one accomplished by Judge Lynch.

The features of the case were the convicting of the boys by their brother Henry turning informer and accusing his mother of being the cause of the crime, as she had trained the boys to steal; and the conduct of a girl named Boyd, who fell in love with Pete, the youngest brother, from seeing him in court, and obtained much notoriety by her efforts to obtain his pardon. She tried to see the governor, but he would not admit her to his presence. The murder netted the young criminals only $20 in cash.

Another, and rather novel, feature of this case is told in a telegram from Osceola, Miss., which states that Mrs. Tollefson, the widow of the man murdered by the Barrett brothers, was married there to Carl Bader, a Minneapolis carpenter, on Wednesday afternoon.

The Ghost at the White House is said to walk half of every night, but he could do double that amount of work if he wasn't afraid of the morning air and knew that Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup cured all kinds of troublesome coughs and colds.

JUSTICE FULLER'S DAUGHTER.

Miss Pauline Runs Away and Marries a Chicago Man.

CHICAGO, March 20.—Society in Chicago, Washington, and Milwaukee was all but uprooted Wednesday morning when the news of the elopement of Miss Pauline C. Fuller, fifth daughter of Chief Justice Melville W. Fuller, was made known by dispatches from the Cream city. The groom is J. Matt Aubery, Jr., of Chicago, son of the general western agent of the Merchants' Dispatch fast freight line, whose residence is at 3801 Vincennes avenue. The eloping pair were married at 6:30 o'clock Tuesday evening in the Kirby house, Milwaukee, by Justice of the Peace George K. Gregory.

There is very little romance connected with the runaway marriage. For several years young Mr. Aubery has been a devoted admirer of Miss Fuller. Their acquaintance sprang up three years ago at a south side social, and since then the pair have been more than friends. The family of the chief justice, at that time a practicing attorney before the Chicago bar, were averse to the attentions of young Aubery and forbade Miss Pauline to keep his company. This she declared was very unjust, and when she became of age she boldly asserted that she would marry whom she pleased. Her father recognized the justice of her claim and made no effort to thwart the consummation of her wishes. Not so with the mother, however, who strenuously objected at every opportunity, and when the Chicago lawyer was appointed to the highest legal position in the United States it was with a glad heart that Mrs. Fuller packed up and carried off her group of lovely daughters to Washington. She knew not the nature of the beautiful Pauline when she thought that the glamour of Washington society would blind her to the handsome face of her Chicago lover. The love which took root at the south side social had grown in strength as the years rolled on, and the clandestine missives which often reached her served but to fan the flame of the smoldering fire of her love. Her independence of spirit was always a source of suppressed pride on the part of her father, while the mother deprecated it very much, fearing that her stubbornness would some day cause her much disappointment. It was this spirit which prompted Miss Pauline to announce last January that she was coming to Chicago to visit friends. Mrs. Fuller objected, but the girl, stating that she was 19 years of age, declared that she would make the journey willy nilly. Her father recognized her right to act for herself and placed no obstruction in her path. Finding threats and persuasions alike useless, Mrs. Fuller made arrangements with friends in this city, and to them Miss Pauline came two months ago. These friends were advised to keep a sharp lookout for Pauline, as she feared that her daughter had not yet outlived her passion for her Chicago lover.

That she was right was proved Tuesday night in Milwaukee when the gray haired justice of the peace made her the wife of Matt Aubery, Jr. The pair met often in Chicago, but always as quietly and unobtrusively as possible. No suspicion was excited, and Tuesday afternoon when the two met in Gunther's candy store on State street and took a cab at the door it would have required a prophet of old to have divined that they were even then eloping. That they got to the depot safely, boarded the train, arrived in Milwaukee, and were married has already been stated.

The pair have removed to the Plankinton house, where they will remain for a few days before returning to this city. The family and relatives of the new husband and wife have been notified of the marriage by wire, and now nothing remains for them but to await the blowing over of the storm, return to loving arms, and devour the fatted calf.

MOSES W. FIELD'S DOINGS.

His Failure to Report on a Trust Development Keeps New Gossip Alive.

DETROIT, Mich., March 21.—It has been learned that the late Moses W. Field had a habit of bestowing large gifts on more than one woman, and that several widows were on his gratuity list. In this way it is believed he has dissipated most of his fortune.

Another matter has been developed which, if anything, more seriously involves his good name. He was administrator of the estate of Maria Kercheval, and at least one beneficiary under the will has not received her share and has petitioned the probate court to appoint a new administrator to ascertain how much of the original estate belongs to her. Mr. Field had not made a report of his stewardship for a long time, although he was ordered to do so a year ago.

A LOSS OF MILLIONS

Shown in the C., B. & Q. Report—What the Directors Think About It.

BOSTON, March 20.—The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad report for 1888 shows a decrease in gross earnings of $3,786,910; increase of expenses, $2,784,546; decrease of net earnings, $7,260,910; decrease of dividends, $2,291,486; increase of deficit, $5,680,051; amount of deficiency to be deducted from previous surplus, $4,331,425. The directors attribute the poor showing to the strike, to new competition, to lower rates, and to the prohibition of pooling. They think the worst feature of the railroad situation is the attitude of the law-making power, state and national.

The Liquor War in Iowa.

EMMETSBURG, Iowa, March 22.—Four arrests of "bootleggers" were made here Thursday for violating the prohibitory law. Two of them, Pete Dorris and Will Pender, were sentenced to forty-five days each in the county jail. John Murray, who had been indicted at the last term of court, was arrested and lodged in jail. His trial will take place in April.

At West Bend, a neighboring town, three thugs made an attack upon a man named Garthwaite, and beat him in a horrible manner. Warrants have been issued for their arrest. Garthwaite is prosecuting the liquor men of that town, and the lawbreakers waylaid him and accused him.

Cleveland Sails for Cuba.

KEY WEST, March 23.—Ex President Cleveland and party arrived here yesterday on the steamship Olivette. They were met by a delegation from the board of trade, accompanied by the fire department, a company of the Island City guards and the silver cornet band, and were escorted to the Russell house, and thence driven around the city. The hotel was beautifully decorated with olive branches, and there was a grand display of bunting throughout the island. Mr. Cleveland received the citizens in the evening, and the party left for Havana at 10 o'clock p. m.

Novel Case in Court.

Professional Jealousy Takes a Remarkable Course.

A CONSPIRACY COMES TO NAUGHT

Attempt to Have a Successful Physician Sent to an Insane Asylum by Reviving an Old Proceeding in Chicago—Other Schemes of the Doctor's Enemy That Were Likewise Failures—Judge Prendergast's Pointed Remarks Upon Dismissing the Case.

CHICAGO, March 23.—A case was tried before Judge Prendergast yesterday which had some remarkable features, if the statements testified are not capable of a different interpretation and they do not appear to be. The accused parties were not in court for some reason, and it appeared that the reason was an excellent one.

The facts as stated are briefly as follows. In 1886 Dr. Williams was a well-known physician in this city, but owing to alcoholism he was adjudged insane by a jury in the county court. It being thought that with proper treatment the patient would improve more rapidly at home, he was confided to the care of his friends. Believing that he would have fewer temptations out of town, the physician removed with his family to Geneva, Kane county, where he has lived for the last two years, built up a good business, and is generally esteemed by his neighbors. He was so successful that a rival physician became jealous and tried in various ways to injure the newcomer. Dr. Williams had rented a house, his opponent bought the property and then ousted the tenant. Stories about William's former life became talked of around town, and it was rumored that he was connected with various mysterious fires of supposedly incendiary origin that had aroused the attention of Geneva's citizens. One night after 12 o'clock this doctor went with one Hiram McChesney to the house of Sheriff Kelly and wanted him to arrest Williams for arson, but the sheriff refused to do so.

Finding their various schemes had failed, McChesney and his doctor hatched another plan. The former filed a petition in the county court of Cook county asking that the order of July 10, 1886, be enforced and that Dr. Williams be committed to an asylum. This brought Dr. Williams before Judge Prendergast yesterday. He was surrounded by his friends, who testified to the facts in the case as narrated above and also to the present high standing of the doctor in Geneva. The complainant, McChesney, did not appear.

"The almost unparalled cruelty to this man," said Judge Prendergast in slow, deliberate tones, "would justify him or his counsel in bringing proceedings against the instigators of this thing. This appears to be a most flagrant outrage, as the evidence shows that he troubled nobody. If Dr. Williams can't get justice in a civil suit he ought to bring the matter before the grand jury of either Cook or Kane county for investigation."

The petition to commit to an asylum was dismissed, and the order and judgment previously made in the case was set aside.

CALLED TO HIS MAKER.

Death of Justice Stanley Matthews After a Lingering Illness.

WASHINGTON CITY, March 23.—Yesterday morning, about 10 o'clock, Justice Stanley Matthews, who has been ill for months, breathed his last. For a number of hours previous to his death he was practically unconscious. In his last hours the dying justice was surrounded by members of his family, who have been with him throughout his illness—Mrs. Matthews, his daughters, Miss Matthews and Miss Eva Matthews, and his son, Paul Matthews, and Mr. C. B. Matthews, his brother, of Cincinnati, who came to Washington a week or ten days ago. Dr. Johnston and the faithful colored servant, who only a few days ago announced to callers with great satisfaction that "Justice Matthews is ever so much better," were also present.
